PATIENTS IN FAILURE NEED AN ORGANOMERCURIAL

Limiting dosage to once daily to avoid refractoriness, or omitting alternate days to circumvent gastrointestinal irritation—necessary with some diuretics—results in a seesaw of diuresis with fluid reaccumulation and recurrent strain on the already failing heart.

With the organomercurials, dosage is individualized and administered as needed, to produce sustained, dependable diuresis.

THE PINEBLUFF SANITARIUM

PINEBLUFF • NORTH CAROLINA

A Sanitarium for Rest Under Medical Supervision, and Treatment of Nervous and Mental Diseases, Alcoholism and Drug Addiction.

The Pinebluff Sanitarium is situated in the sandhills of North Carolina in a 60-acre park of long pines. It is located on U. S. Route 1, six miles south of Pinehurst and Southern Pines. This section is unexcelled for its healthful climate.

Ample facilities are afforded for recreational and occupational therapy, particularly out-of-doors.

Special stress is laid on psychotherapy. An effort is made to help the patient arrive at an understanding of his life problems; and by adjustment to his personality difficulties or modification of personality traits to effect a cure or improvement in the disease. Two resident physicians and a limited number of patients afford individual treatment in each case.

in antibiotic therapy, particularly for the 90% of patients treated at home and in the office

Superior control of infectious diseases through superior control of the changing microbial population is now available in a new formulation of tetracycline, outstanding broad-spectrum antibiotic, with oleandomycin, Pfizer-discovered new antimicrobial agent which controls resistant strains. The synergistic combination now brings to antibiotic therapy: (1) a new fuller antimicrobial spectrum which includes even "resistant" staphylococci; (2) new superior protection against emergence of new resistant strains; (3) new superior safety and toleration.

From your patient's viewpoint, Doctor . . .

is this the painful part of the treatment?

It can be, unless your patients know the true facts about the cost of medical care. Parke-Davis is reaching millions of people, in LIFE, SATURDAY EVENING POST and TODAY'S HEALTH, with a consistent advertising campaign whose theme is "prompt and proper medical care can be one of life's biggest bargains."

In addition to the magazine advertisements, Parke-Davis makes folder-reprints available for use in pharmacies. Chances are, a large percentage of the prescriptions you write are being packaged with one of these folders explaining the value of modern prescription medicines—reaching your patients right at the time when they are most conscious of the cost. To date, more than six million of these folders have been ordered by pharmacists.

In these advertisements, we strive to present the facts about medical care clearly and unemotionally . . . with the objective of increasing the public's appreciation of why costs and procedures involved are reasonable and fair.

Announcing Revision of N.N.R. Monograph for

dihydroxy aluminum aminoacetate

On the basis of considerable in vitro evidence accumulated over a period of seven years, the Council on Pharmacy and Chemistry has revised the original ALGLYN monograph acknowledging that this most recent form of aluminum antacid therapy is as active—IN TABLET FORM—as the various aluminum hydroxide preparations are in LIQUID form:

> "Dihydroxy aluminum aminoacetate . . . shares the properties of the aluminum hydroxide gel preparations. In vitro studies indicate that the buffering action of dihydroxy aluminum aminoacetate in tablet form is comparable to that of the liquid preparations of aluminum hydroxide gel when compared on the basis of equivalent aluminum content."

Alglyn Tablets, 0.5 Gm. dihydroxy aluminum aminoacetate, are supplied in bottles of 100 (white). Your patients will welcome the change from liquid antacid preparations to easy-to-take convenient, lightly-flavored Alglyn Tablets[1].

Also supplied in combination with spasmolytic and sedative therapy as Malglyn Compound, each tablet contains dihydroxy aluminum aminoacetate, 0.5 Gm., belladonna alkaloids, 0.162 mg., phenobarbital, 16.2 mg., per tablet, bottles of 100 (pink); and as Belglyn, dihydroxy aluminum aminoacetate, 0.5 Gm., belladonna alkaloids, 0.162 mg., per tablet, bottles of 100 (yellow).

ATARAXOID is a unique, new combination of STERANE and ATARAX, which now permits simultaneous symptomatic control and reduction of attendant anxiety and apprehension in rheumatoid arthritis and other indications.

The added tranquilizer control, desirably easing mental stress, also directly assists clinical progress. It minimizes the chance of exacerbation related to emotional strain and facilitates patient confidence and cooperation in the therapeutic program toward maximum rehabilitation.

ATARAXOID exerts the anti-rheumatic, anti-inflammatory activity of STERANE distinctly superior to previous steroids, effective in radically reduced dosage, and with minimal disturbance of electrolyte and fluid metabolism.

The ataractic effect is a central neuro-relaxing action – the result of a marked cerebral specificity – free of mental fogging and devoid of any major complications: no liver, blood or brain damage. This peace-of-mind component is also used in the lowest dosage range.

Supplied: Each green, scored, ATARAXOID oral tablet contains 5 mg. prednisolone (STERANE) and 10 mg. hydroxyzine hydrochloride (ATARAX). Bottles of 30 and 100.

Erythrocin in treating tonsillitis and otitis externa*

2/22/56 DISCHARGE SUMMARY

Patient, white male, age 4, entered the clinic on 2/13/56, with a history of yellow discharge from the right ear, a fever, and sore throat of two days duration.

Temperature orally was 100°, pharynx infected, tonsils inflamed, crusted purulent material seen in right ear canal; tympanic membrane normal. Diagnosis -- tonsillitis and otitis externa.

Culture revealed Staphylococcus aureus, coagulase positive, resistant to penicillin and sensitive to erythromycin.

ERYTHROCIN (erythromycin) was started in doses of 25 mgm/kg -- 400 mgm in 4 equally divided doses.

After 24 hours of therapy, patient was afebrile and comfortable. T = 99.6. Throat slightly infected. Secretions in ear canal were dry and both tympanic membranes were normal.

Culture on 2/15 showed no coagulase positive staphylococci or other pathogens. On 2/22, follow-up exam showed him to be completely asymptomatic and free of unusual physical findings. The drug was stopped at this time.

Final Diagnosis: tonsillitis and otitis externa due to Staphylococcus aureus.

Result: complete clinical bacteriologic cure after 9 days with ERYTHROCIN therapy.

"clinical response good or excellent"

In one recent study, 18 patients with acute follicular tonsillitis and septic sore throat, were given erythromycin. Infecting organism was Str. pyogenes. The investigator stated, "In all 18, the clinical response could be regarded as either good or excellent."[1]

This, of course, is only one of many reports showing the effectiveness of ERYTHROCIN against coccic infections. You'll get the same good results (nearly 100% in common, bacterial respiratory infections) when your prescription reads Filmtab ERYTHROCIN Stearate.

"toxicity lower in erythromycin-treated patients"

After a study of 208 patients treated with erythromycin (78), procaine penicillin (78) and a placebo (52), the investigator stated: ". . . the incidence of toxicity (compared to procaine penicillin) was significantly lower in the erythromycin-treated patients."[1]

Actually, ERYTHROCIN stands on a remarkable record of safety. After four years, there's not a single report of a severe or fatal reaction attributable to erythromycin. Also, allergic reactions rarely occur. Filmtab ERYTHROCIN Stearate (100 and 250 mg.), is available in bottles of 25 and 100, at all pharmacies.

SYMPOSIUM ON SURGERY OF THE COLON AND RECTUM

Inflammatory Lesions of the Colon

R. W. POSTLETHWAIT, M.D.*

DURHAM

Of inflammatory lesions of the colon, ulcerative colitis is of greatest surgical interest. Accordingly, this discussion will be devoted largely to this lesion, although diverticulitis, will be noted briefly.

Diverticulitis

A number of reports concerning single-stage resection and primary anastomosis for diverticulitis have recently appeared. For the patient with acute diverticulitis, abscess or peritonitis, the multiple-stage operation remains necessary. One-stage resection has been recommended mainly during a quiescent interval between attacks of recurrent diverticulitis. Urinary symptoms during diverticulitis suggest impending perforation into the bladder, and after proper preparation resection may be done. Lesions in which carcinoma cannot be ruled out may also require resection. One-stage resection should be done only where adequate preparation can be carried out and the operative findings are such that resection and anastamosis can be done in comformity with established surgical principles. Judd and Mears[1] have recently reported 68 one-stage resections with only one death.

Description of Ulcerative Colitis

Ulcerative colitis is an acute and chronic disease of the colon and rectum, characterized by diarrhea, which is frequently bloody, cramping abdominal pain, rectal tenesmus, fever, anemia, and numerous complications. The onset may be abrupt or insidious, and the course is usually one of remissions and exacerbations.

Ulcerative colitis may begin at any age, but is most common between 20 and 40 years. The sex incidence is about equal. Apparently there is no inherited susceptibility, and the disease is not epidemic, infective or transmissible. No immunity is known to develop.

Among the many possible causes of ulcerative colitis which have been suggested are infection, allergy, nutritional deficiency, lymphatic obstruction, lack of protective enzymes, proteolytic or mucolytic enzymes, alterations in ground substance, metabolic disorders, and neurogenic or psychogenic disturbances. The exact etiologic agent has not been established, however.

Pathology

Warren and Sommers[2] have described the pathogenesis, based on 120 surgical and 60 autopsy specimens. Distribution of involvement in specimens which were complete were as follows: rectum 75 per cent, sigmoid 83 per cent, descending colon 83 per cent, transverse 80 per cent, ascending 72 per cent, cecum 61 per cent, and ileum 34 per cent.

Grossly, the mucosa is deep red or purple owing to hyperemia and congestion. The ulcers vary in number, size, shape, and extent; they may be small and punctate or broad and coalescent, with only a few patches of epithelium between. They are frequently narrow, longitudinal, gutter-like depression extending throughout most of the length of the colon, usually between the taeniae. Soft, edematous, polypoid nodules

Presented before the Section on Surgery, Medical Society of North Carolina, Pinehurst, May 1, 1956.

*From the Veterans Administration Hospital, Durham, North Carolina.

are formed by the remaining mucosa, and may overhang and conceal the ulcers. The walls of the colon are irregularly thickened. Although the ulcers may penetrate the muscular layers, the serosa is usually relatively unchanged. The regional nodes are enlarged. Microscopically, the mucosal and submucosal changes are most important. The ulcers tend to be multiple and shallow, and underneath is a heavy cellular infiltrate in extremely vascular granulation tissue. The vessels may show marked changes.

Diagnosis

The symptoms and signs of ulcerative colitis are well known and will not be described here. Proctoscopic examination will show a hyperemic, edematous, granular mucosa, which bleeds easily. Tiny ulcerations and, in fulminating cases, large ulcers may be present. The typical changes demonstrated by barium enema examination are loss of normal haustration, fine serrations, ulceration, rigidity and shortening of the colon, and pseudopolyposis. The differential diagnosis must exclude such diseases as bacillary dysentery, amebic dysentery, tuberculosis, and familial polyposis.

Medical Treatment

Medical therapy at the present consists of a low residue diet, sedatives, antispasmodics, vitamins, retention enemas, antibiotics, chemotherapy and, in selected cases, corticotropin or cortisone. With certain exceptions, proper medical management should be given an adequate trial.

Indications for Surgery

The indications for surgery in ulcerative colitis are well agreed upon by surgeons, but less so by gastroenterologists and internists. A major objection to surgery by the latter seems to be the mortality and morbidity of ileostomy, which have actually been greatly decreased in the past few years, as will be noted later.

Garlock and Lyons[3] stated concisely and appropriately that "surgical therapy is indicated more for the early treatment of complications of ulcerative colitis than for the treatment of the early phases of the disease." The reported incidence of complications should therefore reflect the frequency with which surgery will be required. Kirsner, Palmer, Maimon and Ricketts[4], in a group of 100 cases followed carefully, found that 33 patients had no complications, 28 had one complication, 17 had two complications, and 22 had more than two complications. This would suggest that about 67 per cent of the patients need surgery, but surgical intervention is less frequent in the large clinics. Bargen[5] has stated that 5 to 10 per cent will come to surgery. Cattell and Sachs[6] in a group of 630 patients found surgery necessary in 26 per cent. Other groups report surgery in from 5 to 40 per cent of the patients with ulcerative colitis.

Indications for Operation

The indications for operation may be urgent or elective.

The urgent indications for operation are: (1) acute fulminating disease; (2) hemorrhage; (3) acute perforation; (4) impending perforation; (5) obstruction; (6) carcinoma.

Acute fulminating ulcerative colitis

Acute fulminating ulcerative colitis is usually sudden in onset and progressive. Severe diarrhea, fever, and overwhelming toxemia characterize the course. Cattell and Sachs[6] feel that if a favorable response to medical therapy does not occur within a few days, operation should be carried out. The use of ACTH and cortisone has resulted in at least temporary improvement in many of this group, although this treatment is not without inherent danger.

Ripstein[7] feels that in the acute fulminating type of ulcerative colitis, the results of ileostomy alone will be uniformly poor, with a mortality as high as 60 per cent. These patients have severe loss of blood and protein from the diseased colon, and ileostomy adds the factor of further fluid and electrolyte loss. Also, infection arising in the colon is an important factor in the mortality. The logical treatment, therefore, is removal of the colon. He has carried out primary colectomy in 43 of these patients—all acutely toxic, with severe diarrhea and fever ranging from 103 to 105 F.—with only 2 postoperative deaths. He feels that primary resection is therefore the procedure of choice, as it removes the source of blood and protein loss, eliminates the focus of infection and toxic absorption, and forestalls the danger of perforation.

Hemorrhage

Severe hemorrhage from the colon may be the primary indication for operation, although this has not been frequent in the reported series. Kirsner and his co-workers[4] found hemorrhage as a serious complication in 12 per cent of their patients, and Lahey[8] stated that hemorrhage was a frequent indication for operation in his series.

Perforation

Perforation may be subacute, with formation of a localized abscess, or the general peritoneal cavity may be infected. The latter is usually seen in the acute fulminating disease. The advent of corticotropin and cortisone for the treatment of ulcerative colitis has added the complication of clinically unsuspected perforation. Hayes and Kirsner[9] had 2 cases of unsuspected perforation in 12 patients who received steroid therapy. Ripstein had 3 in a group of 6.

Table 1
Incidence of Perforation

	Per Cent

Dennis and Karlson[11]	3.7
Ripstein[7b]	8.4
Rogers, Bargen, and Black[12]	6.0
Warren and Sommers[2]	8.0

The reported incidence of perforation ranges from 3 to 8 per cent. The necessity for operation is obvious.

An interesting group of patients has what has been termed impending perforation. In these patients, signs of peritoneal irritation develop with increasing tenderness, rebound, and spasm. Ripstein[7] has pointed out the diagnostic importance of a persistently dilated loop of colon demonstrated by x-ray, and considers impending perforation an urgent indication for operation.

Obstruction

The thickening and fibrosis of the bowel wall and shortening of the colon in ulcerative colitis suggest that obstruction would be a frequent complication.

Table 2
Incidence of Obstruction

Kirsner and others[4]	1.0
Warren and Sommers[2]	2.0
Sloan and others[13]	11.0
Warren and Sommers[2] (collected cases)	6.6

The reported incidence is found to be from 1 to 11 per cent and the true incidence is probably about the 6.6 per cent found by Warren and Sommers in more than 2,000 cases collected from the literature. The rectum and sigmoid are the most common sites of obstruction. Mechanical intestinal obstruction will, of course, require operative relief.

Carcinoma

Carcinoma of the colon developing in ulcerative colitis has been the subject of a large number of papers. Opinions vary considerably, and the two extremes are represented by the following reports.

Table 3
Incidence of Carcinoma

	Per Cent
Felsen and Wolarsky[14] (855 cases)	0
Wheelock and Warren[15] (319 cases)	8.8
(of those followed)	18.1
Lynn[16], 1,467 collected cases to 1944	1.9
Machella[17], 6,890 collected cases 1945-52	3.0

Felsen and Wolarsky[14] "examined repeatedly over considerable periods" 855 patients with ulcerative colitis. Fifteen and seven tenths per cent of these had polyposis, and 28.3 per cent of those with polyposis had had ulcerative colitis for nine years or longer. None of the patients with polyposis had carcinoma; in fact, at the time of reporting none of the 855 patients had evidence of carcinoma. Wheelock and Warren[15] reported a group of 319 patients who had lived 10 or more years after a diagnosis of ulcerative colitis was made; 8.8 per cent developed carcinoma. If those lost to follow-up were omitted from the calculation, the incidence of carcinoma was 18.1 per cent. In two large collected series, the incidence was 1.9 and 3 per cent, respectively.

Pseudopolyposis has been thought by some to be the basis for the development of carcinoma, whereas others are emphatic that no relationship exists. Premalignant mucosal polyps should develop in patients with ulcerative colitis to the same degree as in the equivalent age group in the general population. Warren and Sommers[2] believe that with the recurrent ulceration and healing, eventually foci of precancerous epithelial hyperplasia develop in the unfavorable environment. All agree that inflammatory polyps are not premalignant, but the possibility that abnormal and possibly adenomatous hyperplasia develops must be noted. The frequency of carcinoma is undoubtedly related to the duration of the ulcerative colitis. Dennis and Karlson[11] found the incidence of carcinoma to be 10 per cent in patients having ulcerative colitis for more than 10 years, and stated that the risk increased about 2/3 of 1 per cent for each additional year.

The diagnosis of carcinoma of the colon developing in a patient with ulcerative colitis is particularly difficult. These patients are accustomed to abdominal discomfort, blood in the stools, and changes in bowel habit, so that the major early symptoms of carcinoma will ordinarily be ignored. Only with the development of a mass, a complete obstruction, or a similar major change will the possibility of neoplasm be considered. Parenthetically, it should be noted that deaths attributed to chronic ulcerative colitis may well be due to carcinoma if autopsy confirmation is not obtained.

From the reported cases of carcinoma and ulcerative colitis the following statements appear justified:

1. The incidence of carcinoma of the colon is higher in patients with ulcerative colitis, reportedly averaging about 3 per cent.
2. Carcinoma tends to appear at a younger age in these patients, the average being 44.3 years in one large series.
3. The incidence of carcinoma increases with the duration of the ulcerative colitis, several authors stating that an incidence of 20 per cent may be expected in those with ulcerative colitis for more than 20 years.
4. This type of carcinoma is highly malignant and is seldom cured; only one five-year survivor was found in one series of 73 cases.
5. The malignancy is frequently multiple; in one reported group of 40 resected specimens, the carcinoma was multicentric in 21.
6. Ileostomy provides no protection against this complication, nor does quiescent disease.

A suspicion of the development of carcinoma should be an urgent indication for operation. Wheelock and Warren[15] feel that continuation of the disease for two to three years warrants operation on this basis, whereas Dennis and Karlson[11] set the time limit at five years. Certainly any patient with ulcerative colitis for more than 10 years should be seriously considered for colectomy. Obviously, these patients deserve extremely careful follow-up, with frequent proctoscopic and barium enema examination.

Elective Indications for Surgery

The elective indications for surgery in ulcerative colitis are as follows:

1. Intractable disease
2. Severe local complications
   a. Pseudopolyposis
   b. Abscess and fistula
   c. Rectal and anal lesions
3. Systemic complications
   a. Arthritis
   b. Pyoderma
   c. Miscellaneous: anemia, malnutrition, liver disease, thromboembolic disease, and so forth.

Intractable disease

Intractable disease is difficult to define precisely, although it is the most frequent indication for operation in a number of large series. The patient who has repeated attacks of ulcerative colitis requiring prolonged hospitalization; who has become an economic and social liability; who responds poorly and only temporarily to medical therapy; who cannot maintain nutrition, or who shows irreversible changes in the colon should be considered for operation. The results of medical therapy in those with continuous symptoms are not good, and operation should probably be considered for many of the patients who have remissions which are not asymptomatic or prolonged. A large group of patients, followed for many years by unbiased investigators will have to be reported before all questions can be answered concerning this indication.

Local complications

Pseudopolyposis has already been mentioned in reference to malignancy.

Table 4
Incidence of Pseudopolyposis

	Per Cent

Felsen and Wolarsky[14]	15.7
Kirsner and others[4]	16.0
Sloan and others[13]	19.0
Warren and Sommers[2]	45.0

The reported incidence is from 8 to 45 per cent. Regardless of any possible association with malignancy, Cattell and Sachs[6] feel that pseudopolyposis is an indication for operation, since patients in this group generally respond poorly to medical therapy. Garlock and Lyons[3], and also Gabriel[18], state that pseudopolyposis is a definite indication for colectomy.

Localized abscess may form at a point of perforation, and fistula into other portions of the bowel or into the bladder may develop.

	Per Cent
Bone and others[10]	8.0
Cattell and Sachs[6]	11.0
Gleckler and Jones[19]	9.0
Warren and Sommers[2]	6.0

The incidence of this complication ranges from 6 to 11 per cent. The necessity for operation in nearly all of these cases is obvious.

These patients are subject to serious rectal and anal complications such as severe hemorrhoids, fissure-in-ano, perirectal abscess, and fistula, both cutaneous and rectovaginal.

Table 6
Incidence of Anorectal Complications

	Per Cent
Dennis and Karlson[11]	5.4
Gleckler and Jones[19]	10.0
Sloan and others[13]	6.0

With recurrent episodes of infection, incontinence may develop. At times these complications, and particularly the incontinence, are so disabling as to require colectomy.

Systemic complications

Two of the systemic complications—arthritis and pyoderma—deserve special mention.

Table 7
Incidence of Arthritis

Bone and others[10]	8.0
Cattell and Sachs[6]	4.0
Dennis and Karlson[11]	7.1
Gleckler and Jones[19]	5.0
Kirsner and others[4]	8.0
Warren and Sommers[2]	3.0

Arthritis has been reported in from 3 to 8 per cent of these patients. Numerous authors point out that if colectomy is performed before permanent joint damage has occurred, the arthritis can be improved considerably, and not infrequently cured.

Table 8
Incidence of Pyoderma

	Per Cent
Bone and others[10]	3.0
Dennis and Karlson[11]	3.4
Kirsner and others[4]	4.0
Warren and Sommers[2]	9.0

In the severe skin infections which develop at times, relief may be expected after removal of the diseased colon. Either of these two complications may be severe enough to require early surgical therapy. Numerous other complications occur. Some are obviously the result of prolonged malnutrition and anemia, wheras others are a direct result of infection. These will, of course, influence consideration of surgical intervention.

Ileostomy and Colectomy

Ileostomy

Historically, surgery was first employed in ulcerative colitis to form a proximal opening to permit irrigation of the colon with various drugs. Later ileostomy was used to "put the colon at rest." In the past, ileostomy was usually performed only as a heroic gesture when death appeared imminent, and a prohibitive mortality of 50 to 60 per cent resulted. The serious complications following ileostomy in those who survived added to the unfavorable results. In recent years, however, with the proper selection of patients and earlier operation, mortality after ileostomy has been markedly decreased.

The complications of ileostomy (skin irritation, electrolyte imbalance, obstruction, fistula formation, prolapse, retraction, hernia, and enteritis) have largely been eliminated by the improved technical methods developed by Turnbull and Crile[20], Dennis[11], Colcock and Mathiesen[21], Warren and McKittrick[22], and others. The new plastic ileostomy bags and the skin adherents have been of immeasurable value.

Colectomy

Virtually all patients who present the indications for ileostomy also have the indications for subtotal or total colectomy, which should be carried out either at the time of ileostomy or as soon thereafter as practical.

The immediate results are well illustrated by the recent report of Colcock and Mathiesen[21]. They reviewed 307 patients operated upon between 1946-1954, 206 of whom had colectomy. In the entire group, the operative mortality rate was 3.4 per cent. Lahey, in 1950, reported a group of 263 patients who had 531 operations, including 145 total colectomies. The operative mortality prior to 1947 was 11.8 per cent and from 1947 to 1949, 1.8 per cent. As noted before, Ripstein[7] carried out 43 colectomies for acute fulminating disease, with only 2 deaths.

Table 10
Deaths Following Ileostomy

	Per Cent
Prior to 1930	50.0
1930-1939	26.8
1940-1949	12.5
1950-1953	7.7

It is doubtful if these low mortality rates can be attained by many surgeons or groups, but the mortality has clearly decreased remarkably.

Late results

Late results after ileostomy and colectomy are impressive, and are well summarized by Kirsner and Palmer. They stated that "the rehabilitation of the patients after colectomy and ileostomy often is striking, with pronounced rapid gain in weight and strength, subsidence of arthritis, and correction of anemia. The transformation of the emotional status of the patient is especially noteworthy. Improvements in the construction of the ileostomy and in the design of ileostomy appliances allow a complete return to a normal, active, useful life without embarrassment or serious discomfort."

McKittrick and Moore[23] followed 104 patients with reference to ileostomy and found only 9 who had not adjusted completely to the procedure. Ninety-seven per cent were working.

Summary

Approximately 25 per cent of patients with ulcerative colitis will require surgical therapy for intractable disease or for complications. Ileostomy and colectomy will be necessary in most of these patients. The operative mortality should be relatively low, probably less than 5 per cent, and the survivors may anticipate nearly complete rehabilitation.

Polyps of the Colon and Rectum

RICHARD T. MYERS*

WINSTON-SALEM

The most common tumor of the colon and rectum, benign or malignant, is the adenomatous polyp. This tumor has been found to be present in from 7 to 10 per cent of all adults.

The significance of these lesions is their tendency to undergo malignant change, and their proper management, par excellence, is preventive surgery. Indeed, it is generally held that all adenocarcinomas of the rectum and colon arise in preexisting benign adenomatous lesions.

The evidence for this belief, both direct and indirect, is as follows:

1. In any given region of the large intestines the incidence of carcinoma and adenomatous polyps is about the same. For example, the incidence of each in the rectosigmoid is 75 to 80 per cent; similarly, 10 per cent in the descending colon, 4 per cent in the transverse colon, and 6 per cent in the ascending colon.
2. The two lesions are associated in from 25 to 75 per cent of series reports, adenomatous polyps being, on an average, three times as common in patients undergoing surgery for the large intestines.
3. Certain polyps have been observed to undergo malignant change. For one reason or another, some patients have refused surgical intervention for polypoid lesions, proved to be benign, which subsequently became malignant. We have observed one such patient in our experience.
4. As indirect evidence for the relationship between these two lesions, it has been pointed out repeatedly that the 3:2 ratio of benign and malignant lesions of the colon is the same in the two sexes.

This presentation is concerned with the three broad types of adenomas occurring in the rectum and colon. These types, which differ primarily in incidence, morphology, and surgical implications, are the adenomatous polyp, the papillary adenoma, and familial polyposis.

The Adenomatous Polyp

The adenomatous polyp is by far the most common of the benign tumors of the rectum and colon. Grossly, it appears as a rounded, reddish or brown mass, varying from a few millimeters to 3 or more cm. in diameter. Though it may be found to be sessile, continued peristaltic action usually results in the formation of a pedicle of varying length. The pedicle simply represents a tenting of the redundant mucosa.

Bleeding is the most common symptom in patients with adenomatous polyps, occurring in roughly one-half of the cases. About one third of the patients are asymptomatic, and the polyps are found incidentally in a routine sigmoidoscopic or digital examination, which should be a part of every complete physical examination. An inconstant number of patients will exhibit pain from increased peristaltic activity, with partial obstruction and possible intussusception, tenesmus, actual prolapse of the polyp, diarrhea, or passage of mucus.

Diagnosis depends in large part on the performance of an adequate sigmoidoscopic examination, since three fourths of these lesions occur within 25 cm. of the anal canal. The barium enema, with double contrast technique, must be relied upon for lesions above this level. Repeated examinations are often necessary, and extreme care must be exercised to clean the colon completely.

The treatment of the adenomatous polyp is surgical expiration. It is preferable, where possible, to remove the lesions surgically in order to make an accurate microscopic examination of the removed tissue. Electrocautery and fulguration are employed preferably as an adjunct to surgical removal rather than as the primary approach. In the majority of such lesions this is possible.

The approach to the removal of these lesions depends upon the location of the adenoma and falls roughly into one of three groups:

1. The few which are located close enough to the anal canal may be delivered through the anus and completely removed, with ligation of the stalk flush with the mucosa under adequate direct vision. The low-lying sessile lesions may be treated in this way also.
2. Those presenting at or below the peritoneal reflection require an approach through the sigmoidoscope. If the lesion is only a few millimeters in diameter, it may be removed by the biopsy forceps alone. Pedunculated polyps are best removed by means of a cautery snare placed at the base of the stalk, the cautery serving as a means of hemostasis as the snare slowly clips the stalk of the polyp flush with the bowel wall. The larger sessile lesions require more complicated techniques, which will be discussed below.
3. In my opinion, polyps situated above the peritoneal reflection should be approached transabdominally, with colotomy and surgical excision of the polyp. Localization of the lesions can present a problem, for even with careful palpation the larger lesions are occasionally difficult to find, and the smaller ones are even more elusive. The fact that such lesions are multiple in about one third of the cases complicates the situation even more. For these reasons a thorough visual search of the entire colon is usually indicated and may be accomplished readily through three openings located in the mid-ascending, mid-transverse and mid-descending colon. In this fashion the entire mucosal surface of the large intestine may be carefully scrutinized.

After localization these lesions may be surgically excised at the base of the stalk under direct vision. In polyps which have been removed by way of the transabdominal approach, frozen sections of the suspicious lesions only are examined, since examination of colonic lesions by the frozen section technique is somewhat difficult to interpret.

Other Adenomatous Lesions

Two other adenomatous lesions of the colon and rectum though relatively uncommon, will be discussed briefly.

Papillary adenoma

The papillary adenoma or villous papilloma of the rectum and colon, though a true adenoma, is distinguished from the adenomatous polyp by certain definite criteria:

1. It has a definite villous configuration.
2. It has a broad, sessile base, without a pedicle.
3. It is soft, velvety, and without evidence of ulceration or induration.
4. It is mobile, and superficially located, without fixation.

This lesion appears grossly as a large, velvety, broad based exuberant growth, and may occupy the full circumference of the bowel. It is commonly low-lying, and almost without exception within the reach of the sigmoidoscope. It may bleed, obstruct, produce large quantities of mucus, or initiate intractable tenesmus. Roughly 20 per cent of these lesions will show adenocarcinoma in situ at the time of removal. They are, however, slow to metastasize and invade the lamina propria.

Their management, as that of all adenomatous growths, is complete surgical removal. In the low-lying lesions this may be accomplished by excision down to the muscularis and closure of the mucosal defect. If on examination the lamina propria is invaded, radical resection of the rectum is indicated. Larger lesions involving the wide arc or the total circumference of the bowel may best be managed by a pull-through procedure or direct exposure by the Kraske approach, with sleeve resection of the rectum.

Familial polyposis

Familial polyposis (intestinal adenomatosis) is an hereditary condition involving the colon and the rectum, transmitted by and attacking both sexes. It is apparently due to a gene mutation inherited by a Mendelian dominant. It is characterized by diffuse involvement of the colon and rectum by literally thousands of polyps, sessile and pedunculated, of varying sizes.

Symptoms vary widely, although bleeding is present in 60 per cent of the patients and diarrhea in about 30 per cent. Often the patient is unaware of his condition until a complicating carcinoma of the colon or rectum intervenes. It is generally felt that all patients who live long enough, and in whom this condition remains untreated, will undergo malignant degeneration in one or more of the polyps.

Extirpation of these lesions requires rather extensive surgery, involving total or near total colectomy. Removal of the colon down to the rectosigmoid with ileosigmoidostomy is the procedure of choice in those instances in which polyps in the rectum can be removed completely by excision or fulguration. If the polyps are too numerous for this type of control, total colectomy and permanent ileostomy is the procedure of choice.

Summary

The clinical characteristics, surgical implications, and methods of management of certain adenomatous lesions of the colon and rectum are presented.

Carcinoma of the Colon

GEORGE T. WOOD, JR., M.D.

HIGH POINT

Malignant lesions of the colon are among the commonest cancers in man. They are frequently engrafted on the only precancerous lesion — adenomatous polyp — now known to man.

There is still much controversy concerning the management of these lesions. The conflict probably exists between the primary low surgical mortality and normal physiology marking limited resections as against the effort to eradicate the disease by a more radical operation. There is a price to pay in morbidity and mortality in adequate resections, but when one is dealing with a killer, radical surgery and long risks are in order.

The principle issue is whether the case is favorable or unfavorable for surgery, and whether the operation is palliative or is performed with the hope of effecting a 5 or 10 year survival. If the case is favorable—that is, if no lymph nodes are involved—between 60 and 65 per cent of the patients should be living and well five years later, and from 55 to 60 per cent ten years later. However, if the case is unfavorable—that is, if lymph nodes are involved—only 15 per cent of the patients will be living and well five years later, and about 10 per cent at the end of ten years. The rate of operability has been increased to the point that about 75 to 80 per cent of the lesions can be removed, though some of these operations will be palliative only. About 20 to 25 per cent of the growths cannot be resected.

Symptoms and Signs

Cancer of the colon presents no typical early signs or symptoms. The anatomic differences between the right and left colon and the difference in the type of lesions on the two sides makes for dissimilar symptoms. Lesions on the right tend to ulcerate, and do not produce early obstruction because of the size of the lumen and the liquid nature of the contents; hence anemia, weakness, and weight loss may be the outstanding symptoms. Many of these patients think they have appendicitis.

Case 1

A 46 year old woman presented the complaint of attacks of periumbilical pain, occurring at two-week intervals, for the past three months. The attacks lasted from four to six hours, and were associated with vomiting and a 12-pound weight loss. The patient died of a cerebral metastasis three years after resection. At autopsy the abdomen was found to be entirely negative.

Case 2

A 42 year old man presented the complaint of intermittent pain in the right lower quadrant of the abdomen of two and one half months' duration. He was seen by two physicians, who could not confirm the diagnosis of appendicitis. There had been a 20-pound weight loss and weakness, but no blood in the stools. Roentgenograms were not taken until a mass was palpated.

Moreover, many of these patients are treated for anemia without benefit of stool or x-ray studies.

Case 3

A 76 year old woman had had marked anemia and a 20-pound loss of weight over a period of seven months before a mass could be palpated in the right portion of the abdomen and confirmatory roentgenograms taken.

Case 4

This patient, a 61 year old man, had complained of weakness and had been treated for anemia for the past five months. He had no symptoms referable to the colon until a mass was palpated in the right lower quadrant of the abdomen.

In lesions of the left colon the lumen is smaller, there are areas of normal constriction, the bowel contents are more solid, and the patient is more likely to complain of obstructive symptoms and to notice blood in the stool at an earlier date.

Case 5

For 13 months constipation had been a problem with this 57 year old woman, but roentgenograms taken at that time were negative. During the next 12 months constipation and mild bleeding were thought to be due to hemorrhoids. Three weeks before admission she had had cramp-like pains associated with partial obstruction. X-ray studies then revealed a sigmoid lesion.

Case 6

The patient, a 36 year old woman, presented a history of slight bleeding without obstruction or constipation of three weeks' duration. A sigmoidoscopic examination was negative. X-ray studies revealed a sigmoid polyp. At resection this was found to be an adenomatous polyp which had undergone malignant degeneration.

Lesions in the left part of the colon may be advanced without producing symptoms of obstruction.

Case 7

A 28 year old woman presented the chief complaint of severe intermittent pain in the left lower quadrant of five days' duration. During this time she did not have a stool. A palpable cul-de-sac mass was thought to be ovarian. Operation disclosed metastasis to the liver, direct extension to the left ovary, and an obstructing mass of the sigmoid colon.

Diagnosis

The diagnosis of cancer of the colon should be simple. A digital examination of the rectum with the patient in the proper position, sigmoidoscopic examination of the properly prepared bowel, and stool studies for occult blood, followed by a barium enema, should be the routine procedure. If a lesion is seen, a biopsy should be done. Roentgenograms of the rectum are not trustworthy, and the roentgenologist should insist that a sigmoidoscopic examination be done before x-ray studies are made. Negative x-ray studies of the right colon should be repeated at an early date if the clinical symptoms suggest a lesion in this area.

Case 8

In 1939 this 61 year old man had a rather large hemorrhage from the bowel, but no x-ray studies were made. In January, 1954, he had 16 bloody stools in three days. Roentgenograms were taken but were reported negative. In May, 1954, he had cramping pain associated with a palpable mass, but since the previous x-ray films had been negative, he did not have another examination until December, 1954, when a filling defect could be seen in the right transverse of the colon.

Case 9

A 56 year old man was admitted to the hospital on February 1, 1955, because of secondary anemia, loss of weight, and occult blood in the stool. Sigmoidoscopic examination and barium studies were negative. Reexamination two months later revealed a filling defect in the right portion of the colon. At this time a mass was palpable.

If the symptoms are still suggestive and no lesion is demonstrated, exploratory operation should be done after the patient is properly prepared. It has perhaps been the experience of some surgeons to find a carcinoma in the cecum when operating to take out a large sigmoid polyp.

Case 10

The patient, a 66 year old woman, presented the complaint of slight bleeding from the rectum of short duration. X-ray examination showed a large sigmoid polyp. A sigmoidoscopic examination and barium studies of the right colon were negative. Operation disclosed a large cancer of the cecum, with a benign polyp in the sigmoid colon.

A barium enema is hazardous when there is a lesion of the colon. The bowel can be perforated.

Case 11

This patient, a 59 year old woman, was admitted for study. The symptoms suggested a lesion of the transverse colon, which was confirmed by barium studies. Eighteen hours later she complained of severe abdominal pain and went into shock. A flat plate of the abdomen showed extravasated barium, operation revealed marked gangrene.

Preoperative Preparation

The preparation of these patients for surgery includes correcting the anemia, restoring low serum protein, decompressing the bowel if obstructed, and controlling the bacterial flora of the intestinal contents by chemotherapy. In elderly patients, cardiovascular problems should be evaluated and controlled insofar as possible. The anemia associated with lesions of the right colon may be marked, and may require multiple transfusions of whole blood. The hematocrit should be brought up to 40 or above. Low total serum protein is difficult to restore by parenteral measures, and too often these patients cannot take adequate food by mouth. Serum albumin, protein hydrolysates, and blood should be administered.

Decompression is accomplished by repeated enemas and mild saline laxatives if obstruction is incomplete. If these measures are unsuccessful, cecostomy or transverse colostomy should be done. If surgical decompression is required, the procedure should be one that will not interfere with later resection. In my own experience, cecostomy has been successful for this purpose, and if it is done with a Pezzar catheter without exteriorization of the cecum, a secondary closure will not be necessary. Neomycin and Sulfathaladine have been the chemotherapeutic agents of choice.

In the unobstructed cases, 18 hours of medication including a dose of castor oil are required. In cases of obstruction, medication without castor oil should be given for 72 hours. The schedule of dosage is: Neomycin, 1 Gm., and Sulfathaladine, 1½ Gm. hourly for four hours, then every four hours until operation. If castor oil is used, 60 cc. is given after the fourth dose of the drugs. McKittrick has advised against using these drugs as a "surgeon's bibb," to replace adequate preparation of the bowel and careful surgical technique.

A word about the postoperative symptoms following the use of these drugs: Distressing diarrhea has occurred about the seventh postoperative day in many cases, and has been difficult to control. Pseudomembraneous enterocolitis has not been recognized in our cases. Alteration in bacterial flora seems to be the cause of the condition which has responded fairly well to lactic acid bacilli by mouth.

Choice of Operation

Multiple primary lesions or lesions due to implantation occur frequently enough to demand a thorough examination of the entire colon at operation, and it is suggested that a sterile sigmoidoscope be available for the examination of the proximal and distal bowel at the time of surgery. Polyps in the bowel adjacent to the resection should not be overlooked.

The operation for cancer of the colon should be designed to remove the lesion and the gland-bearing area, with restoration of bowel continuity.

The requirement of an adequate curative procedure are: (1) prevention of manipulative spread; (2) prevention of implantation; (3) excision of sufficient bowel to include maximum intramural spread; (4) removal of the cancer by en bloc excision, with the dependent echelons of lymph node spread (de Peyster and Gilchrist).

On the right side, an ileocolectomy, including the ascending, hepatic flexure and right transverse colon and mesentery, with an end-to-end anastomosis of the ileum to the left transverse colon, is performed. This procedure has been widely accepted; for lesions in the splenic flexure, however, resection has been more limited, but should include the left transverse and descending colon, together with the spleen, in many cases, and anastomosis of the mid-transverse to the distal bowel. The same is true with regard to sigmoid lesions.

The chief factor limiting the degree of resection is the vascular supply to the remaining bowel. The inferior mesenteric artery should be ligated close to its origin and the mesentery and glands removed. Open anastomosis instead of aseptic operation over clamps is preferable, and one can be more certain of the blood supply. Other factors which limit the extent of resection are: (1) the boldness and skill of the surgeon; (2) hepatic metastasis; (3) fixation of the growth; (4) general systemic conditions affecting individual resistance to surgery; (5) increase in the resectability rate over the past few years.

Palliative resection

The removal of a large ulcerating or obstructing growth is desirable even in the presence of metastasis. Bowel continuity should be established if possible, but again one may ask, "Are we prolonging life or extending the act of dying?" Let us just hope we can make the last days more peaceful and comfortable for the patient, and less agonizing for the bereaved family.

Case 12

A 70 year old woman had had pain of the right lower quadrant of the abdomen, associated with fever, of about 10 weeks' duration. She had recently noted blood in the stool, but there had been no obstruction or weight loss. Physical examination disclosed a palpable mass in the right lower quadrant, fixed to the abdominal wall. X-ray examination showed a filling defect in the sigmoid colon.

At operation the lesion was found to extend through the bowel wall and to involve the abdominal wall, but it was possible to perform a palliative resection, with end-to-end anastomosis. Two benign polyps were found proximal to the lesion in the resected specimen. The patient is living and well two and one half years later, and shows no evidence of local or systemic disease.

Conclusion

We hope that the day will come when present surgical procedures will be replaced by some chemotherapeutic agent which will offer a cure for cancer of the colon. Until then, however, we should strive for earlier diagnosis and increase the extent of resection in order to give these patients a better chance of a long term survival. Limited resections for the immediate advantages of lower morbidity and mortality should be discouraged.

Carcinoma of the Rectum

F. M. SIMMONS PATTERSON, M.D.

NEW BERN

During the past several decades the knowledge and treatment of carcinoma of the rectum has steadily improved. New surgical procedures have been advocated, old procedures have been repopularized, and advances in technique have been instituted. As a result there has been an increase in the percentage of resectability and an increase in the survival rate. The careful studies and investigations of both surgeons and pathologists have helped us greatly in determining the prognosis of carcinoma of the rectum and in selecting the type of therapy to be employed in each individual case. We have learned that all rectal carcinomas are not necessarily treated alike. The gross appearance of the lesion, its location, its degree of cellular differentiation, its method of spread are all of the greatest importance. Factors met at the operating table, such as the age and physical status of the patient, the size of the pelvis, the size and extent of the lesion, the presence or absence of metastases, all play a part in the procedure to be followed.

In the choice of operation for carcinoma of the rectum, the outstanding question is whether or not to preserve the anal sphincters and permit restoration of intestinal continuity, thus avoiding a permanent colostomy. Sommers and Mattocks[1] aptly stated: "The thought of saving the sphincters should not be approached with enthusiasm but with factual knowledge and considerable surgical skill, for one is dealing with cancer, a lesion never to be treated too early and seldom too radically."

Before we discuss the most widely accepted surgical procedures in the treatment of carcinoma of the rectum, and especially before we judge their relative merits, it is essential to review the anatomy of the rectum, with special emphasis on its lymphatic drainage, and also the modes of spread of carcinoma in the area. A thorough knowledge of the lymphatic drainage of the rectum is essential. In 1908 Moynihan[2] stated that "surgery of malignant disease is not the surgery of organs, it is the anatomy of the lymphatic system." His remarks are particularly apropos to carcinoma of the rectum.

Anatomy

The rectum begins at the lower portion of the sigmoid at the level of the body of the third sacral vertebra. It ends at the anus at the tip of the coccyx. It is 12.5 to 13.5 cm. in length and varies in diameter at different levels. The first or upper portion of the rectum lies within the pelvic cavity, and is covered by peritoneum on its anterior and lateral aspects. The lower limit of the peritoneal covering on the posterior surface of the large intestine is at the beginning of the rectum at the third sacral vertebra. The level at which the peritoneum leaves the wall of the rectum anteriorly is higher in the male than in the female. In the male the reflection occurs about 7.5 cm. proximal to the anal orifice, the peritoneum being reflected upon the bladder, thus forming the rectovesical pouch. In the female this reflection occurs about 5.5 cm. proximal to the anal orifice, the reflection being upon the vagina and thus forming the rectovaginal pouch or the cul-de-sac of Douglas.

The location of carcinoma of the rectum in relation to this peritoneal reflection is all important in the prognosis and treatment, as will be shown later. The rectum is rather loosely attached in the pelvis by the endopelvic fascia. The levator ani muscles come into contact with the lateral surfaces of the rectum about 3.5 cm. proximal to the anal orifice. The levators, by serving as a fixed point of attachment of the rectum, probably act as its main support.

The arterial supply of the rectum is derived from the superior, middle, and inferior hemorrhoidal arteries. The superior hemorrhoidal artery, which is a branch of the inferior mesenteric artery, anastomoses in its distal portion on the posterior surface of the rectum with the middle and inferior hemorrhoidal arteries, which are branches of the hypogastric arteries. The venous drainage of the rectum occurs through the middle and inferior hemorrhoidal veins, which are branches of the hypogastric veins, and through the superior hemorrhoidal vein, which is a branch of the inferior mesenteric vein. Thus an intimate connection between the rectum and both the portal and systemic systems exists.

Lymphatic Drainage and Spread

In the mucosa of the rectum is a rich lymphatic plexus, which extends throughout the submucosal and muscular layers. From the submucosa the lymph vessels course in a radial manner through the muscle coats to form a subserous plexus. Although a few channels run for a short distance longitudinally between the muscle coats, the main direction of flow is radial[3]. It has been shown that the longitudinal spread is seldom more than 2 cm. above or below the gross mucosal edge of the lesion[4].

The lymphatic drainage of the rectum follows somewhat, but not entirely, the vascular pattern—that is, the lymph vessels follow the course of the superior, middle, and inferior hemorrhoidal vessels.

By far the principal lymphatic pedicle of spread of the rectum is along the course of the superior hemorrhoidal and inferior mesenteric arteries. The entire rectum is drained by this system. The fact that dye injected anywhere in the rectal mucosa can be demonstrated in the inferior mesenteric nodes substantiates this statement. This is the only lymphatic spread for carcinomas of the upper rectum. A majority of the lymphatic channels in the rectum pass to the pararectal nodes of Gerota—4 to 10 in number—which are located above the levator ani muscles on the posterolateral rectal wall, and then to intermediate nodes about the superior hemorrhoidal bifurcation. Efferent trunks from the Gerota and superior hemorrhoidal nodes course along the superior hemorrhoidal vessels to reach the principal nodes—5 to 10 in number—at the origin of the inferior mesenteric artery. Other channels travel without interruption to these latter nodes. Bacon[3] believes that dissection and removal of the inferior mesenteric lymph nodes are essential in every radical operation for cancer of the anus, rectum, sigmoid, or descending colon.

The lymphatics from the anal canal extend across the perineum to the superficial and deep inguinal nodes. From the upper anal canal and lower rectum the lymph vessels follow the course of the inferior hemorrhoidal artery across the ischiorectal fossa and then proceed to the hypogastric, common iliac, and pre-aortic nodes.

Lymph vessels from a higher level in the rectum spread more or less in a lateral manner, following the course of the middle hemorrhoidal artery, and, to a lesser degree, of the middle and lateral sacral vessels. These lymphatics drain into several nodes in the lateral rectal ligaments, from which efferent vessels go to the internal iliac and pre-aortic nodes. Spread from this area may also occur anteriorly up the rectogenital septum and then lâterally to the internal iliac vessels.

As mentioned previously, from the mid-rectum upward the lymphatic drainage is by way of the superior lymph pedicle along the course of the superior hemorrhoidal vessels.

Modes of Spread

After this brief review of the anatomy of the rectum including the vascular and lymphatic drainage it is important to discuss the different modes by which carcinoma of the rectum spreads.

Carcinoma of the rectum may be disseminated by the following means[5]:

Direct extension: Carcinoma begins in the crypts of Lieberkühn in the rectal mu-cosa. Direct extension may occur through the rectal wall and marginally along the mucosa. The plane of greatest longitudinal spread occurs in the mucosa, and is seldom more than 2 cm. in either direction from the gross mucosal edge of the lesion[4]. Pathologic studies have shown that as far as the rectal wall is concerned, there is no need for transection more than 4 to 5 cm. below the gross lesion[1]. By direct extension, the rectal wall may be penetrated and the contiguous structures invaded.

Lymphatic spread: Spread by this manner is usually embolic in nature. When a node is involved by metastasis, further spread is prevented until the node is completely replaced by tumor cells. Then new emboli go into other lymph channels. An important fact is that skip patterns may occur—for example, metastatic nodes may lie at some distance from the original tumor, with normal nodes intervening.

Venous spread: Ravitch[6] reported invasion of veins in 15 per cent of cancers of the rectum. According to Grinnell[7], tumors of the rectum have a greater tendency to invade veins than has any other tumor of the colon. Venous invasion may even occur before lymph nodes are involved.

Perineural spread: Seefeld and Bargen[8] found that in 30 per cent of 100 surgically removed carcinomas of the rectum there was perineural spread. Such a spread is associated with a strong tendency to local recurrence.

Prognosis

An accurate basis for determining the prognosis in carcinoma of the rectum is not always possible, but we may be aided by a number of factors:

Gross appearance of the lesions: Carcinoma of the rectum may be polypoid or ulcerative. A polypoid tumor tends to grow by extension into the rectal lumen, with relatively late involvement of the submucosal and muscular layers of the rectal wall. It is of low-grade malignancy, and metastasis occurs late. The ulcerative type grows by extension into the submucosa, muscular layer, and finally the serosa. It penetrates the rectal wall earlier than does the polypoid type of lesion. Even though the ulcerative lesion be small, it may show extensive invasion and widespread and early metastasis.

Location of the tumor: A carcinoma of the rectum located below the peritoneal reflection has a much higher rate of recurrence than does one above it, and offers a poorer prognosis. Gilchrist and David[9] reported 55 patients with surgically treated intraperitoneal rectal carcinomas, 18 per cent of whom died of recurrence within five years. In a series of 122 cases of carcinoma below the peritoneal reflection, 43 per cent of the patients died within five years.

Grade of extension: According to Duke's classification of rectal carcinomas[10], Grade A designates a cancer that is confined to the mucosa; Grade B includes those lesions that have penetrated into or through the muscularis mucosa without lymph node involvement; Grade C includes those lesions which have extended to the muscularis mucosa and have metastasized to lymph nodes; Grade C_2 includes the lesions that have extended through all layers of the rectal wall, with positive nodes. Gabriel, Dukes and Bussey[11] reported a five-year survival rate in 91 per cent of the grade A cases, 64 per cent in Grade B, and 16 per cent in Grade C.

Degree of cellular differentiation: Broders'[11] method of grading tumors is based on the degree of cellular anaplasia present. This classification is of doubtful preoperative value in the management of rectal carcinoma, because the nature of the tumor varies in different areas and biopsies are therefore not entirely reliable. We must examine specimens from all regions and of the entire depth of the tumor before we can histologically offer a reasonably accurate prognosis.

Evaluation of Procedures

The rationale and relative values of the different operative procedures employed in the treatment of carcinoma of the rectum should now be considered. Regardless of what procedure is chosen, two requirements should be fulfilled: (1) The tumor must be resected together with an adequate margin of apparently normal tissue; and (2) the field of lymphatic drainage of the tumor must be resected as extensively as possible within the limits of the individual case. As Sommers[1] has stated: "In selecting the proper operative treatment for cancer of the rectum, a clear knowledge of its pathology and zones of spread is essential to the surgeon, for he must know the reason for each part of his operative treatment." And let us never forget that each case is an individual one. With experience every surgeon can develop a degree of technical skill, but it is his judgment that differentiates him from the everyday journeyman surgeon.

Operative Procedures

The operative procedures employed in the treatment of carcinoma of the rectum are many and varied. The most widely accepted operations are Miles' classical abdominoperineal resection, with permanent colostomy; the abdominoperineal proctosigmoidectomy, with preservation of the anal sphincters and transplantation of the bowel to the anus; and the anterior resection, with end-to-end anastomosis.

Extirpation of the rectum with preservation of the anal sphincters was employed by several European surgeons, particularly Hochenegg[12], in the latter part of the nineteenth century. Because of its high recurrence rate and many complications, the procedure fell into disfavor. These facts led Miles, at the turn of the century, to his intensive investigations of the lymphatic spread of the rectum; and he devised his classical abdominoperineal resection with permanent colostomy in an effort to deal with the superior, lateral, and inferior pathways of lymphatic spread. Although some of Miles' concepts concerning lymphatic drainage have proved somewhat inaccurate, his work is generally regarded as the greatest single contribution to the surgical treatment of cancer of the rectum. It is to two American surgeons, Gilchrist and David[13], that we are indebted for an accurate and concise demonstration of the lymphatic drainage of the rectum.

At various times since Miles described his operation in 1907, there have been attempts to dispense with the abdominal colostomy and to restrict the perineal portion of the operation. These efforts involve mainly the pull-through operation and the anterior resection. To many surgeons neither of these operations meets the criteria of an adequate operation for cancer. Neither of them is new. After the Hochenegg "Durchzug" (pull-through) procedure was largely abandoned in the English-speaking countries more than 50 years ago, Babcock and Bacon reintroduced it in the United States, with some modifications, in the early 1930's, and have reported satisfactory results. The anterior resection is of greater antiquity. Anterior resection is the term applied to the removal of the lower sigmoid, rectosigmoid, and upper rectum. Restoration of intestinal continuity is obtained by an end-to-end anastomosis between the sigmoid and rectum. It was given a very thorough trial by the late George Crile, Sr., and later by Thomas Jones of the same clinic. They discarded the operation nearly 30 years ago. An attempt to revive its popularity was made by Dixon[14] and Wangensteen[15] in this country.

Lesions of the lower rectum

No matter what surgical procedure is contemplated, it must be remembered that not all cancers of the rectum are alike. It was emphatically shown by Gilchrist and David[9] that the prognosis for carcinomas of the rectum below the peritoneal reflection is much worse than for lesions above this reflection. Gray[16] stated that thorough investigations by many surgeons and pathologists have shown unquestionably that the internal anal sphincters are microscopically invaded by malignant cells in a high proportion of the cases where the lower border of the tumor extends down to within 3 cm. of the upper border of the levator muscles. Obviously the sphincters should not be preserved in the presence of such a low-lying lesion. It is believed that the poor prognosis in the treatment of lesions at this low level is due to underestimation of the extent of lateral spread. Lateral lymphatic spread is primarily associated with carcinomas of the lower 4 to 5 cm. of the rectum. Guernsey, Waugh, and Dockerty[17], after studying 210 specimens, concluded that no attempt should be made to preserve the sphincters when the primary lesion is within 5 cm. of the anal orifice. In these cases a wide resection of the rectum, including removal of the levators, the sphincters, and the pararectal tissues is mandatory. These rigid specifications are met by the Miles' combined abdominoperineal resection with colostomy.

Lesions in the mid-rectum

The greatest debate over the surgical treatment of cancer of the rectum concerns lesions located from 6 to 12 cm. above the anal orifice. Those advocating the sphincter-preserving type of operation for these lesions refer to the reports of Glover and Waugh[18] and Mayo[19], who found that retrograde lymph node metastasis occurs in only about 1 per cent of the cases investigated, and then only if upward lymphatic extension is blocked by metastatic nodes. Even in these instances, metastatic nodes have not been found more than 3 to 4 cm. below the lower margin of the lesion. Also, except in extremely anaplastic lesions, the intramural spread is not more than 1 cm. beyond the apparent edge of the lesion (2 cm. as measured on the bowel before resection)[20]. The advocates of sphincter-preservation maintain that these findings regarding local spread indicate that resection of 5 cm. of rectum and pararectal tissues below the lesion is adequate. In 600 cases thus treated, Bacon[21] reported a mortality of 3 per cent. The five-year survival rate was 53 per cent, and the ten-year rate was 38 per cent. Waugh and Kurzweg[22] reported 45 such cases with a five year survival rate of 51.1 per cent.

Dixon[14] lists as the chief objections to the pull-through operation: (1) It is more difficult technically; (2) it is more hazardous than the abdominoperineal resection; (3) fecal control after sphincter-preservation is little different from that achieved with abdominal colostomy; (4) it is a less radical and less effective method dealing with a malignant lesion than is the abdominoperineal operation. He refutes these complaints as being unfounded.

Lahey[23], in 1951, stated:

> One of the objections we have always had to sphincter-preserving operations is a distinct conviction that with this procedure it will be almost impossible not to lean in the direction of limiting the radicalness of the procedure. Its advocates deny this criticism but we cannot conceive of a surgeon doing such a procedure being concerned with the blood supply of the colon being pulled down to the perineum without leaning in the direction of caution. We cannot conceive of a surgeon doing this operation without being a little handicapped by the need to preserve an adequate length of colon to get down to the level necessary to implant it on the perineum. I am convinced that were it possible to compare accurately pull-through procedures and sphincter-preserving procedures in a large series of cases with Miles resection and a colostomy, it would be found that these newer procedures have resulted in deaths and complications and lowered five-year survival rates that could have been avoided by employing abdominoperineal removal with colostomy.

His opinion is shared by a great majority of surgeons who prefer the Miles abdominoperineal resection for lesions at this level.

Lesions of the upper rectum

Next we are concerned with lesions in the upper rectum, for example, 10 to 12 cm. above the anal orifice. The lymphatic spread for lesions in this area is upward only along the superior hemorrhoidal vessels to the nodes about the inferior mesenteric vessels and aorta, unless there is gross occlusion of the nodes. Anterior resection with primary anastomosis for carcinoma of the upper rectum as advocated by Dixon[14] and Wangensteen[15] is as effective as the Miles operation for lesions in this area. There is disagreement concerning the anterior resection. Smyth[24] feels that it should be reserved for two groups of patients: (1) the very old, who may be expected to die of intercurrent disease before cancer catches up with them; (2) those for whom the operation is physically possible, in whom obstruction is not a major sympton, and who already have metastasis to the liver, or other distant points.

Lymphatic dissection

In every radical operation for cancer of the anal canal, rectum, or sigmoid, whether it be the Miles abdominoperineal resection, a pull-through procedure, or an anterior resection, a regional and inferior mesenteric lymphatic dissection with aortic ligation of the inferior mesenteric artery should be considered essential. Many surgeons hesitate to do this lest the distal colon be deprived of its blood supply. However, adequate collateral circulation is supplied by the marginal artery. In 261 consecutive cases in which the above technique was employed by Bacon and Trimpi[25], the mortality was only 1.9 per cent, and no appreciable morbidity could be attributed to the ligation of the inferior mesenteric artery.

Carcinoma of the Anus

In conclusion, it is important to differentiate carcinoma of the anus from carcinoma of the rectum. The anal canal is lined with squamous epithelium, and therefore develops a different type of cancer which spreads not only along the usual three pedicles of lymphatic drainage but to the inguinal nodes. An operation for cancer of the anus should include simultaneous or secondary dissection of the inguinal structures.

Conclusion

The crux of the problem in the surgical management of carcinoma of the rectum is the realization that not all carcinomas in this portion of the intestinal tract are alike. Combined abdominoperineal resection with permanent colostomy is the operation of choice for lesions existing in the rectum below the peritoneal reflection, or just above the peritoneal reflection, unless a factor such as age or pathologic spread makes the procedure an unwise one. In the low-lying lesions the sphincter-preserving operations should not be performed. It is the consensus of the majority of surgeons that carcinomas of the mid-rectum are also best treated by the combined abdominoperineal resection. There is a definite place for the anterior resection. For lesions in the upper rectum and rectosigmoid, at least 12 cm. or more above the dentate line, anterior resection offers results as favorable as those of the Miles procedure. In this area, as previously mentioned, the lymphatic spread is upward only, and so the prognosis is better.

Finally, much confusion and many misinterpretations and misconceptions have resulted from an effort to compare statistics regarding five- and ten-year survival rates. In such comparisons, the relative value of the different surgical procedures for the treatment of carcinoma of the rectum can be accurately determined only if the series compared involve treatment of lesions in identical areas of the rectum.

Summary

1. The anatomy of the rectum, including its arterial, venous and lymphatic supply has been reviewed.

2. The methods of dissemination of carcinoma of the rectum are given.

3. Factors influencing the prognosis of carcinoma of the rectum are enumerated and briefly discussed.

4. The rationale and relative values of the most widely accepted operations for carcinoma of the rectum are discussed.

The Genesis of Cancer of the Colon*

NATHAN A. WOMACK, M.D.†

CHAPEL HILL

We could well begin this discussion by asking: What is the significance of cancer of the colon as related to disability and death? Is it frequent enough and disabling enough to warrant weighted attention, and are these problems capable of solution?

Incidence of Cancer

It is difficult to ascertain accurately the over-all frequency of cancer. Indeed, any estimation of the annual number of deaths from this disease is subject to error. In a recent discussion of this point, Steiner[1] estimated that the failures due to inaccurate diagnosis and incorrect reporting represent a factor of approximately 20 per cent. Most pathologists, I believe, would agree with him. The failure to report all cases of cancer is particularly noted when another eminent cause of death has supervened, such as pulmonary embolism or pneumonia, or when the lesion is early and has produced few symptoms, or when the lesion has even been cured. Using figures from the National Office of Vital Statistics, and extrapolating[2], Steiner estimates that an additional 79,000 cancer deaths should be added to the 207,721 reported for 1948. This would give a total of 286,721 and would mean that of the deaths reported for that year, approximately 17 per cent were directly caused by cancer, while approximately 20 per cent of those dying were people who either had cancer at the time of death or had been cured of cancer.

This same statistical source gives the large intestine as the most frequent site of cancers causing death—33,694 or 16.2 per cent for the year 1948. While undoubtedly other statistical sources might depress this relative position, I doubt if any authority would place it lower than second among the most frequent sites of death producing cancer. Our problem, then, is a major one, and well worth our attention.

The Search for Clinical Data

Spontaneous cancer of the colon is primarily a disease of human beings. It is rare in such animals as the mouse, the rabbit, the rat and the hamster, which are so important at present in the study of experimental cancer. While at times it can be produced by the local application of potent carcinogens to the mucosa for a long period of time, this fact has added but little to our knowledge of the lesion. Just now, therefore, we are dependent upon clinical observation and study for our information concerning this disease. Here we enter into a phase of study in which clinical medicine differs from the basic biologic sciences, in that the physician must study a complex subject with many variables. As a rule he finds it difficult to modify his experiment in a controlled way. Often, therefore, his conclusions are based on the frequency of association of certain factors, and these when subjected to deductive analysis give us certain clinical concepts of the life history of the disease. As these concepts become confirmed by more and more experience, methods of therapy can be fashioned.

Our studies in the beginning, then, will be of an epidemiologic nature. They will relate to the identification of certain factors that may or may not be associated with cancer of the colon. It is well to point out that such studies cannot prove etiologic relationship. They can suggest guilt by association, but it must always remain merely a suggestion and not a primary cause-effect relationship. To the statistician the association of two events in more than 95 per cent of the instances becomes statistically significant. In medicine this is not necessarily true. A weird example would be the predominance of the association of the wearing of trousers with the occurrence of cancer of the prostate gland. Here is statistical significance of a very high order indeed, but the causal relationship leaves much to be desired. Nevertheless, such statistical studies are important, for they often suggest underlying factors of significance. Furthermore, when no association at all can be found between a particular event and cancer of the colon, we can be spared false lines of pursuit. Negative statistical evidence may at such times be more important than information of a more positive nature.

Recently Dorn and Cutler of the National Cancer Institute published a monograph on the morbidity from cancer in the United States[3] from which I shall draw heavily for statistical information. In it they call attention to two important sources of error in the gathering of statistical data. These are well worth stressing.

One important requirement is that the population sample studied must be representative of the larger population under consideration. One can only approach perfection in this category. Obviously, to be completely accurate in studying aspects of colonic cancer as it affects the entire population, the entire population should be studied. This being impossible, one must resort to judicious sampling. Perhaps in this category lies the most flagrant error in the use of medical statistics. Too often broad conclusions are drawn from a study of a limited population, and it is so easy to add and divide.

The other requirement is that the data collected be sufficiently reliable. Here again perfection is difficult to attain. Microscopic verification of every lesion by a competent pathologist is usually impossible. Nevertheless there are other methods of diagnosis which, while not as accurate, usually reflect a high degree of reliability, and on the whole it is easier to meet this requirement than that of representative sampling. When either of these factors falls short of the degree of accuracy desired, the validity of the interpretation drops. One requirement is not more essential than the other, and one cannot be substituted for the other.

I need not go into the methods Dorn and Cutler used in arriving at their data. Suffice it to say these data are probably the most reliable available at the present time.

Possible Causal Factors

Age distribution

Let us consider first the factor of age. The modal age or the age period in which cancer of the large bowel most frequently appears is between 60 and 65 years (fig. 1). This suggests that whatever the cause or causal factors of this cancer may be, a considerable length of time is required for the cancer to develop. In this way it differs from trauma or acute infections. Again, while it does not exclude hereditary factors, it does strongly indicate that, if such factors are present, they also require the action of other agents or cancer of the large bowel would usually appear quite early in life.

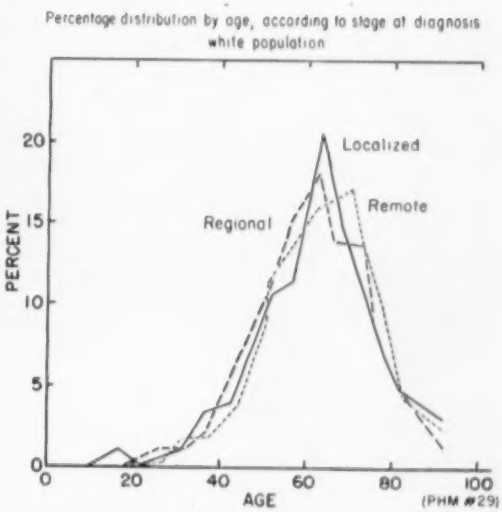

Fig. 1. Newly diagnosed cases of cancer of large intestine, 1947. (Modified from Dorn F., and Cutler, J. S.: Morbidity from Cancer in the U. S., United States Public Health Service, monograph no. 29.

We also notice that there is but little difference in the age distribution of cases when classified as to degree of extension at the time of diagnosis. This is disturbing, for the less extensive lesions should appear generally at an earlier age if all these cancers gave symptoms early and progressed at a fairly constant rate to widespread metastasis. It suggests, therefore, that the presence of metastasis is more a factor of tumor-host resistance than that of time, and that the relationship between early diagnosis and lack of extension may not be so clear cut. This was noted long ago in osteogenic sarcoma and more recently has been suspected of being true in cancer of the breast and cancer of the stomach.

Sex

There is but little difference in the frequency of cancer of the colon in either sex (fig. 2). This makes is possible for us to

Site	Males Per Cent	Females Per Cent
Genital organs	40.0	78.3
Breast	.8	70.6
Large intestine	25.2	26.8

exclude any major effect from sex hormones or from occupation. It also makes it possible to exclude any sex-linkage in possible hereditary factors. Where sex differences have been reported, the incidence in the female is uniformly lower.

Race and geographic location

The effect of race and geographic location on the incidence of cancer of the colon is worth attention. As is well known, certain cancers such as those of the uterine cervix, esophagus, stomach, buccal cavity, and skin vary widely in frequency with different types of people in different lands. With cancer of the colon the picture is not too clear, owing to insufficient data. Reports from British Malaya, Egypt, Finland, Japan, Nigeria and Paraguay[4] show the percentages of such cancers as are noted at autopsy to be uniformly similar although somewhat lower than that noted in the United States, but still hardly enough to be significant. Steiner[5] has noted from autopsy data gathered in Los Angeles that cancer of the large intestine is less than half as frequent in the Mexican as it is in the Caucasian, while the frequency rate in Negroes was slightly more than half that of whites. He noted the frequency to be especially low in Negro women. These are migrant Mexicans that were studied, and it would be valuable to know the frequency rate in that part of Mexico from which they came. Such a study on migrants has been carried out on the American Negro. Dorn and Cutler have noted that the low rate of cancer of the colon encountered in the Negro in the South changes to a rate comparable to the white when the Negro resides in the North (figs. 3 and 4). Such a study would tend to suggest environmental rather than racial factors in their explanation, although the evidence is not yet adequate.

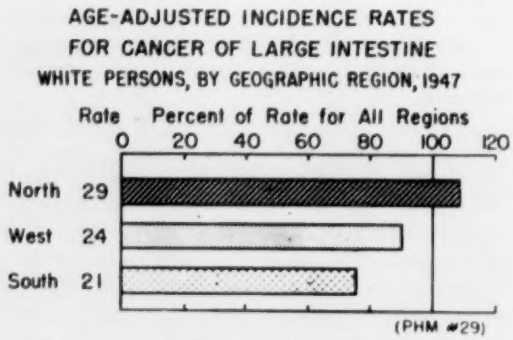

Fig. 3. Age-adjusted incidence rates for cancer of the large intestine. (Modified from Dorn, F., and Cutler, S. J.: Morbidity from Cancer in the United States, U.S. Public Health Service, monograph no. 29.)

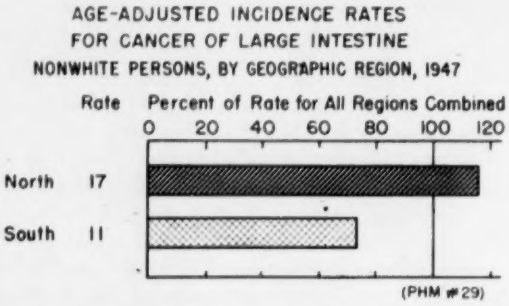

Fig. 4. Age-adjusted incidence rates for cancer of the large intestine. (Modified from Dorn, F., and Cutler, S. J.: Morbidity from Cancer in the United States, U.S. Public Health Service, monograph no. 29.)

As can be seen, this brief epidemiologic survey has given us much valuable negative information but little positive help in regard to the etiology of cancer of the colon. We do find a suggestion that there is a factor, probably environmental, that exists in the South and tends to make the population slightly less prone to this type of tumor. It is apparent in the white male and female, but much more so in the Negro male and particularly in the Negro female. This factor disappears following migration to the North.

Development of the Tumor

Let us now examine the life history of the tumor itself in a search for clues. Depending upon so-called host resistance, cancer of the colon grows and invades with varying degrees of rapidity. If invasion is early down to the level of the muscularis mucosa, the hyperplastic area loses its mobility and cannot be stretched to form a polyp (fig. 5). Instead, trauma and infection produce early ulceration and the lesion appears as a fungating or constricting cancer. If this invasion is not rapid, the hyperplastic area may become entrapped by a peristaltic wave and pulled until it is attached to the bowel only by a stalk (fig. 6).

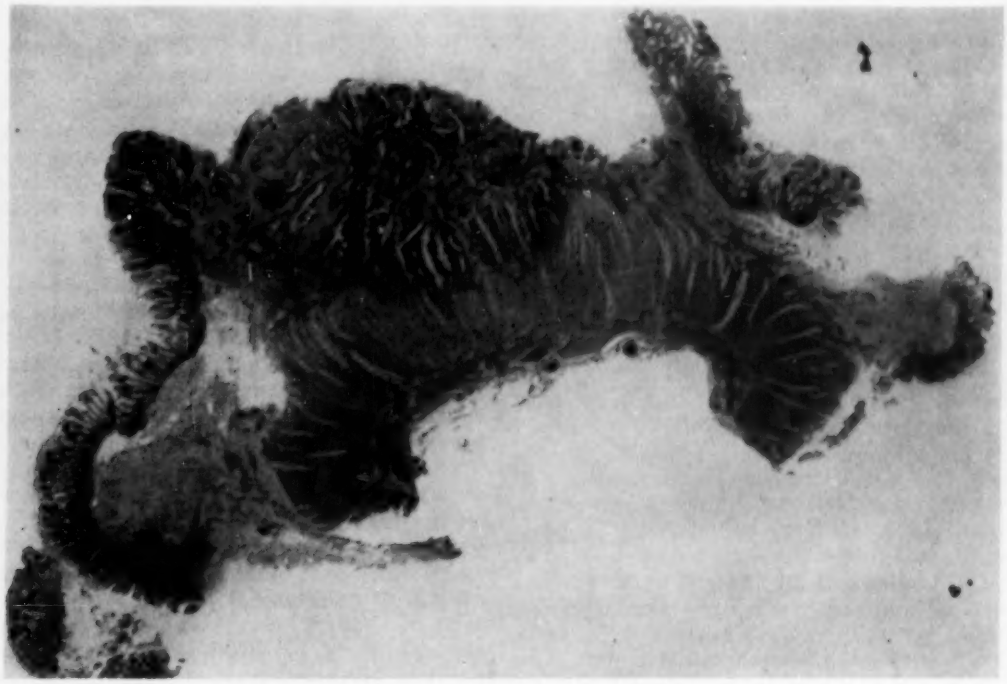

Fig. 5. Early cancer of the large bowel invading the muscularis.

Fig. 6. Polyp of the large bowel from the same patient as in figure 5.

Here growth may be impeded for a very long time. It is well to recall these two extremes of growth, for it makes us cognizant of the fact that polyps of the colon are not specific separate benign tuors, but are actually neoplasms whose growth potential has been altered by environmental factors. Too often they or new lesions eventuate into frank clinical cancer. Thus they are not premalignant lesions, but actually are cancers in an early stage of progression.

Adenomas and Polyps

It is thought by many and in all probability is true that all cancers of the large bowel present themselves first as such adenomas or polyps. Certainly, it is rare not to find one or more such adenomas in the colon adjacent the cancer, and it is also equally true that, when ulceration occurs, the lesion loses its adenomatous appearance. It becomes obvious, therefore, that all such lesions should always be completely excised and that the microscopic configuration of the tip of an adenoma or polyp is not nearly so important in determining the progression of the malignant process as is the presence or absence of invasion of the muscularis mucosa.

Polyposis

There are times when one encounters not one or several such polyps but finds the entire colon literally studded with them. This condition has been termed polyposis by Dukes, who has made several important observations on this disease. For perhaps two centuries it has been known that polyposis is associated with cancer of the colon. The literature now contains, and many of us have also seen, the records of families in which this disease seems to be concentrated to such an extent as to suggest transference by way of a dominant gene. It is insidious in onset, often not appearing until adolescence, and again not presenting itself clinically until hemorrhage or cancer supervenes. If careful routine studies are made of all relatives of the patient with polyposis, the frequency of polyps of which the carrier is unaware is usually amazing.

In studies of the site of isolated polyps, the frequency coincides quite well with the sites that are seen in cancer of the large bowel. This has been graphically revealed in a recent study by Smith[6], who noted that, when the rectum was excluded, about three fourths of the isolated polyps occurred in the lower portion of the left colon.

Genetic Factors

That single polyps may also be concerned with a dominant hereditary factor has recently been brought out by Richards and Wolf[7]. Encountering a large family group that presented an unusually high incidence of colon and rectal cancer, a family in which 33 per cent of the adults of the second generation had died of gastrointestinal cancer, they performed sigmoidoscopic and roentgenographic examinations of 62 of the third generation offspring. They found that 31 (50 per cent) had small adenomatous polyps in the rectum or rectosigmoid. Two of 12 fourth generation children examined also had polyps, and 14 of 20 third generation patients reexamined after a year or year and a half were found to have new lesions. Not only do these findings suggest a strong familial trait, but they also tend to confirm the clinical observation of the frequency of multiple cancers of the colon in the absence of apparent polyposis.

Promoting Factors

In spite of the accumulating evidence pointing to the presence of an hereditary factor in the formation of cancer of the colon, we are all impressed with how seldom it apparently operates as polyposis. Even when polyps are demonstrable, they are not as a rule present in infancy and young childhood; and certainly, as we have seen, the cancer does not appear until later in life. This suggests the presence of another factor in addition to the hereditary effect—namely, a promoting factor. We have previously noted this in our epidemiologic survey.

What this promoting factor might be is as yet unclear. The presence of ulcerative colitis has for a long time been known to be associated frequently with the development of carcinoma of the colon. A nice example of this association can be seen in a recent study from the Mayo Clinic[8] in which 1,564 patients under the age of 50 years were followed for a period of 12 to 32 years. Cancer developed in 98 of these individuals, a frequency about 30 times greater than expected in the general population of this age group. And yet we note that patients in the tropics with amebic enteritis or chronic bacillary dysentery have not shown a tendency to have carcinoma as have patients with ulcerative colitis.

Again, the predilection of carcinoma of the colon to appear in certain peculiar sites also denotes the presence of some sort of determining or promoting factor. Just now, however, its exact nature can only be surmised.

Conclusions

Our study then seems to reveal that cancer of the colon, one of the most frequent of the death-dealing cancers, may be related to two etiologic principles. One of these, the exciting factor, may have as its basis a fundamental alteration in a few or many of the epithelial cells of the bowel as a result of certain changes transmitted by inheritance. This change could possibly be in the chromosomes, and may even be quantitative. Another factor, the promoting factor, that brings the tumor into overt being must also be present, and this likewise may be quantitative and is definitely related to time.

Pathologic Physiology of Hypertension: The Role of the Arterioles

MERRILL P. SPENCER, M.D.

WINSTON-SALEM

The central factor in hypertension is the state of the arterioles, because in them lie both the cause and effects of this condition. We shall define the arterioles functionally as the group of small precapillary vessels of the systemic arterial tree, which contribute the lion's share of the peripheral resistance. This group includes some vessels which are usually called small arteries. The peripheral resistance (R) is the ratio of the mean arterial pressure (P) to the blood flow (F), or $R = \frac{P}{F}$.

Classification

Hypertension, as we ordinarily use the term, means an elevation in the systemic arterial pressure. This presentation is chiefly concerned with those types having an elevation of diastolic pressure, but special attention will be given to essential hypertension and renal hypertension. The following outline gives a classification of hypertensive conditions based on function and etiologic factors.

Arterial and Arteriolar Changes

In all hypertensive states wherein the diastolic pressure is elevated, the total peripheral resistance is found to be increased. This means that the arteriolar channels throughout the body are narrowed. Spasm of the small arteries can be seen in the retina of early hypertensive patients. Whether the etiologic agent of this spasm is a humoral substance, a neural influence, or a higher setting of all the mechanisms responsible for a normal blood pressure, its action appears primarily to affect the smaller arterial twigs or arterioles.

These vessels are not only acted upon by the hypertensive agent but are, in turn, affected by the pressure itself. It is the delemma of this situation which often causes the disease to persist once it has begun, and accounts for the progressive deterioration of the patient.

After years of hypertension the smooth muscle of the arterioles hypertrophies and becomes fixed by a sclerosis of the media with a narrow lumen. Scattered occlusion of the small vessels results from severe sclerosis and necrosis. In other focal areas where the arterioles fail to buffer the rise in arterial pressure, capillary hemorrhages and edema occur.

In the larger arteries, the atherosclerotic process is hastened. Weakening of their walls and occlusion of their lumen lead to the complications of cerebrovascular accidents, coronary occlusion, dissecting aneurism, and peripheral vascular disease. Renal failure results usually from the diffuse arteriolar nephrosclerosis.

The arterioles of the kidney are in a particularly strategic position. Normally they pass 20 per cent of the cardiac output from arteries to veins and thus are in a position to alter materially the peripheral resistance. In addition, they control the blood flow through an organ capable of elaborating vasospastic substances when its flow is diminished.

Renal Changes Associated with Chronic Hypertension

Table 1 illustrates the progressive hemodynamic changes occurring in the kidney with chronic hypertension.

Table 1
Renal Functional Data in Hypertension[3]

Function	Normal	Early	Established	Malignant
MAP	100	126	154	176
RPF	674	630	393	216
GFR	128	130	93	61
FF	0.19	0.20	0.24	0.29
RA	1.1	1.7	3.7	5.6
RE	1.0	0.8	1.4	1.6
R	2.2	2.8	5.1	7.2

Figures are the average values found in cases studied. MAP = mean arterial pressure in mm.Hg. RPF = renal plasma flow in ml./min. GFR = glomerular filtration rate in ml./min. FF = filtration fraction. RA = afferent resistance. RE = efferent resistance. R = total renal vascular resistance.

Summarizing all the clearance measurements made in hypertension, one may say that the blood flow diminishes steadily, while the glomerular filtration rate is at first upheld and later falls, but at a slower rate than the fall in renal blood flow. The filtered fraction of plasma steadily increases, but is not sufficient to maintain the glomerular filtration rate in the later stages of the disease. With the increased arterial pressure, the vascular resistance increases mainly in the preglomerular or afferent arterioles. The pathologist has long emphasized the changes in the afferent arterioles as the cardinal microscopic finding in this disease. These functional and pathologic findings may best be understood in the light of normal physiologic mechanisms studied experimentally.

When the arterial pressure is increased above normal in experimental animals, the renal blood flow diminishes while the glomerular filtration is unchanged or increased slightly[4]. These changes are parallel to the findings in early hypertension, and indicate constriction of the afferent arterioles simply as a response to increase in pressure. This mechanism of afferent constriction in the face of changing arterial pressure may be viewed as a means of buffering the glomeruli so as to maintain a normal glomerular filtration pressure. This intrinsic mechanism has been called "autonomous," because it operates independently of the sympathetic nervous system.

Later and Final Phases of the Hypertensive Process

Let us now consider the established phase of the hypertensive process. The pressure has continued to rise and the blood flow decreases rapidly. The falling glomerular filtration rate indicates failure of the mechanisms which control it. The histology of the kidney gives an answer, as the afferent arterioles consistently show the changes of arteriolar nephrosclerosis. If we consider the functional state of the kidney to be a summation of the action of the intrinsic mechanism and the hypertensive etiologic agent, it is small wonder that these arterioles above all others in the body display this structural change. From this viewpoint the longstanding and intense vasoconstriction constitutes the pathogenesis of arteriolar nephrosclerosis. This structural change then leads to obliteration of the lumen, and glomerular filtration rate and renal blood flow diminish.

The closing chapter in the natural history of hypertension is malignant nephrosclerosis, an apt term for the often rapid worsening of the patient's health. Cardiac and cerebral vascular disease complicate the picture. In the retinal vessels we are afforded a glimpse of the changes occurring in the small vessels throughout the body. Here we see hemorrhages, exudates, and papilledema. The urine contains red cells and protein. If the patient does not succumb to cardiac or cerebral complications, he dies in uremic coma. All the complications in the hypertensive process originate in arterial or arteriolar disease.

No adequate explanation for this accelerated phase has been brought forward. It is possible, however, that it results from a nephrogenic factor. Up to this point we have explained all the findings in the kidney as resulting from hypertension; but now we believe arteriolar disease may in turn produce further hypertension by the elaboration of one of the humoral hypertensive substances of the kidney. The vicious cycle may be diagrammed as in figure 1.

When the patient gets into this set of circumstances, there is no escape unless one of the links in the chain is broken. One link that we now have the tools to attack is, of course, the hypertension itself. This is the subject of anti-hypertensive drugs and surgical sympathectomy.

Renal Hypertensive Mechanism

Considering now the renal types of hypertension, let us discuss the hypertensive mechanism which is so often seen in the primary diseases. The classical viewpoint, exemplified by the Goldblatt kidney, is that reduced blood flow causes ischemia, and ischemia causes the elaboration of a hypertensive substance. There has been no direct demonstration of such a substance in human beings, but indirect evidence for it is overwhelming.

We believe, however, that this renal hypertensive mechanism arises from a reduced glomerular filtration rate rather than from ischemia. This thesis is based on the premise that the circulatory mechanisms peculiar to the kidney are oriented primarily for the homeostasis of the glomerular filtration rate. Some of the supporting arguments for this thesis may be presented here. The renal circuit is more generously endowed with blood flow than is necessary for adequate respiration. This excess blood, we believe, is for the purpose of maintaining glomerular filtration; but when this reserve fails, the humoral hypertensive mechanism is brought into play. Other physiologic evidence is afforded by the renal vascular response to polycythemia[5]. Here the glomerular filtration is maintained in part by afferent dilatation sufficient to allow an increase in blood flow in spite of increased viscosity. A normal filtrate is extracted from a reduced plasma flow (replaced by cells) by elevation in the filtered fraction.

Clinically, hypertension is more closely associated with the clinical affections of the kidney in which the renal disease primarily affects glomerular filtration. These are glomerulonephritis, lipoid nephrosis, intercapillary glomerulosclerosis, and toxemia of pregnancy. Clearance determinations in all these conditions associated with hypertension demonstrate greater decrease in glomerular filtration than in blood flow, and indeed often no reduction in blood flow.

Summary

Attention has been directed to the arterioles as the keystone in the pathologic physiology of hypertension. We have shown how the clinical findings and complications of hypertension result from sclerosis of these vessels and from the arteriosclerotic and atherosclerotic processes in the larger arteries. We have presented a classification of the hypertensions based on etiology and pathogenesis.

We have shown how the early renal changes in hypertension may be regarded as a physiologic response, resulting in pathologic changes of the arterioles and thence causing parenchymal disease and renal failure.

We have high-lighted glomerular filtration as the parameter the renal intrinsic vascular and humoral mechanism seeks to protect. Toward a more meaningful clinical interpretation, we have presented a hypothesis that the mechanism of renal hypertension is based on reduced glomerular filtration rather than on ischemia.

The Medico-Legal Interprofessional Code and Its Practical Application in Personal Injury Litigation

ROCKY MOUNT

For a number of years, it has been my fervent desire as an attorney to establish a constructive working relationship with the members of the medical profession—a relationship based on mutual trust and respect. Four years ago a medico-legal institute was held at Duke University. There, in a spirit of constructive criticism, two doctors issued a telling indictment against the attorneys of North Carolina, which is still ringing in the ears of many of us who were present. The indictment was based on the experiences of doctors called to testify in cases involving personal injuries. I am sure that most of the attorneys present who truly searched their souls would have had to plead guilty to the following charges:

1. Failure to study the medical problem involved in order to assist the doctor in presenting his testimony.

2. Failure to discuss the case fully with the doctor before trial.

3. Failure to make suitable arrangements for the client to pay the doctor for his time and services.

4. Failure to arrange for a doctor to be permitted to testify as soon as possible upon arriving at court.

5. Failure to advise doctors sufficiently in advance as to when it would be necessary to come to court.

UROLOGISTS report the decided advantages of oral efficacy, minimal side effects, and wide range antibacterial activity offered by ACHROMYCIN in the treatment of urinary tract infections.

Finland's[1] group of patients with acute infections of the urinary tract (principally E. coli) demonstrated excellent response, both clinical and bacteriological, following administration of tetracycline.

Prigot and Marmell[2] reported 49 out of 50 patients with gonorrhea showed a negative smear and culture on the first post-treatment visit. Purulent discharge disappeared in these patients within 24 hours after a usual 1.5 Gm. dose of tetracycline.

Trafton and Lind[3] found tetracycline (ACHROMYCIN) an effective antibiotic for treating many urinary tract infections caused by both Gram-negative and Gram-positive organisms.

English, et al.[4] noted that a daily dose of 1 to 1.5 Gm. of tetracycline resulted in urinary levels as high as 1 mg. per milliliter.

To suit the needs of your practice and to further the patient's comfort ACHROMYCIN is offered in a complete line of 21 dosage forms.

North Carolina Bar Association, working with a committee from the North Carolina Medical Society, has endeavored to work out a uniform procedure for cooperation between doctors and attorneys, which will benefit not only the members of our professions, but above all the injured parties. The Medico-legal Interprofessional Code is the result of their work. This code can be of great benefit to the citizens of North Carolina. If we, as attorneys and doctors, will adopt it as the ground rules for our working relationship, it will become the cornerstone of a new era in the historic struggle to establish true medical facts—a struggle which should lie at the heart of all properly conceived and judiciously conducted personal injury trials.

Next to those who are actually engaged in some phase of the legal profession, doctors are perhaps more essential than any other group to the effective administration of civil justice in this country. With the gigantic increase in industrial machinery and automobiles, more than nine million persons are being injured or killed annually by accidents. The annual cost of these accidents exceeds eight billion dollars. You doctors know better than I of the suffering of the injured and of their families. Many of these accidents are caused by the negligence of someone other than the victims. Consequently, the proportion of lawsuits brought by injured persons has increased steadily until today approximately 75 per cent of all cases now pending in the courts throughout the country involve personal injuries. Furthermore, it has been estimated that in the presentation of a personal injury suit, 75 per cent of the attorney's work involves, directly or indirectly, the medical aspects of the case. In the presentation of these aspects the attorney must ultimately depend on the doctor. Many of you doctors understandably will regard this as bad news, since for you it inevitably means increased responsibility without a proportionate increase in creative satisfaction in the central area of your professional interest. I am confident, however, that in presenting medical information to the court, you can not only render a great service, but will enjoy a genuine creative satisfaction in an area which is at least allied to your central interest. It will undoubtedly bring a measure of fulfillment to the basic humanitarianism which has always characterized your profession. You can assist the patient to recover from the economic losses resulting from his accident, in addition to healing his physical injuries.

Principles Underlying the Jury System

Before discussing the code and its practical application, I shall make a few brief observations about the courts and the principles underlying the jury system:

1. Your right to be honest: I regret to say that doctors are sometimes surprised to learn that lawyers want them to be honest in their testimony. It is my abiding conviction that with but few unfortunate exceptions attorneys genuinely want you to be honest in every respect when you give medical testimony in court.

2. The adversary system: In the courts of this land, we employ the adversary system for determining the rights of parties to a dispute. We believe that it is essential to a free society that every person be represented by a competent advocate and be given a full and fair hearing before his will is subjected to the will of another, and before his claim or rights are disposed of. Thus we have evolved the adversary system, with partisan attorneys advocating the cause of each party to the dispute and an impartial jury deciding the issues. The judge supervises the conduct of the trial and instructs the jury as to the law. This system may leave much to be desired, but history and experience reveal that it is the best system we know for adjudicating the rights of free men in a free society.

3. Jurors: Most of the cases in which medical evidence is presented are decided by jurors. The members of the North Carolina Bar are thoroughly convinced that, contrary to the general belief, the overwhelming majority of jurors in civil cases are conscientious, and earnestly seek to do justice according to the law. Furthermore, those jurors who are not conscientious seldom participate in the deliberation of the others, and consequently have little effect on the verdicts rendered.

4. The rules of evidence: The rules of evidence govern the type of information which can be presented in court. The purpose of these rules is to enable the jury and court to hear all evidence which is relevant or unduly speculative.

5. The amount an injured person is entitled to recover under the law: Every case in which an injured person sues and is entitled to recover damages under the law involves the question of how much compensation he is entitled to receive. In the trial, the judge instructs the jury as to the law, but the law which he instructs them to follow is very general. It provides that the injured person should have a "fair and reasonable compensation" for expenses and for all injuries (including physical and mental suffering which he or she has undergone in the past, is undergoing at the present, or is likely to undergo in the future) which were caused, to any extent, by the negligent conduct of the other person. So, in the final analysis, an injured person is entitled to recover from the person who injured him whatever amount the jury thinks is fair and reasonable.

Most law firms in North Carolina represent both injured plaintiffs and insurance company defendants. From our experience in representing both plaintiffs and defendants, we have found that there is generally ample room for an honest difference of opinion as to how much the injured person should recover and the insurance company should pay under a specific set of facts. This question can always be decided by a jury. However, we make a serious and systematic attempt to settle every case which comes into the office on the basis of an educated guess as to what the jury will consider fair and reasonable.

6. Malpractice suits: Suits against doctors for malpractice constitute one of the most unpleasant phases of the practice of law. An objective appraisal of the actual situation however, reveals that malpractice suits are extremely rare. We find that doctors have a far greater fear of fraudulent claims against them than they do of valid claims. This fact can easily be appreciated, for certainly half of the damage is done to the doctor's reputation by the mere institution of a suit against him, even though it is without valid basis. I sincerely believe that if the members of the medical and legal professions learn to work together in mutual trust and consideration, the great majority of the claims which are without valid basis in law and fact will never materialize, but will be effectively discouraged by the attorneys.

The Interprofessional Code

The preamble of the Medico-legal Interprofessional code states:

> Acknowledging that a substantial part of the practice of law and medicine is concerned with the problem of persons who are in need of the combined services of a lawyer and doctor: that the public interest and individual problems in these circumstances are best served only as a result of cooperative efforts of all concerned; that members of both the legal and medical professions share an obligation to the individual and to society: we the members of the North Carolina Bar Association and the Medical Society of the State of North Carolina do adopt and recommend the following declaration of principles as standards of conduct for attorneys and physicians in inter related practice.

Section B of the code deals with medical reports requested by attorneys. Since medical information regarding patients is privileged information, the attorney should always furnish the doctor or the hospital with a written authorization, signed by his client, for the requested information. This authorization is purely a statement that the attorney represents the client and that the client is willing for his medical records to be divulged to him. When requesting medical reports, the attorney should clearly specify the information desired.

Section B of the code also emphasizes that ample time should be allowed for a physician to examine a patient and make a report. It is always more satisfactory to have the client examined several months before the trial. If this is not possible, attorneys are generally agreed that the doctor should be given a minimum of two weeks before the trial in order to examine the patient, make his report, and prepare to appear in court as a witness.

Section C of the code deals with the preparations which the attorney and physician should make for giving medical testimony in court. It is pointed out that the attorney and physician, at their mutual convenience, should hold a conference, at which all matters about which the doctor will be questioned as a witness should be disclosed and discussed fully. I cannot conceive of any situation involving the presentation of medical evidence in court to lay jurors wherein a conference of this sort is not absolutely necessary.

Application of the Code

In order for this code to have real significance for you, let me illustrate its practical application by describing briefly an approved procedure for handling the preparation of the medico-legal aspects of a personal injury case.

The attorney's preparation should begin before the conference with the physician. The attorney first has to prepare himself for that conference. He should go to the hospital, present the written authorization, and examine the patient's chart, x-ray pictures and other medical records. He should abstract these records from beginning to end, make a list of the unfamiliar medical terms appearing in the records and define them. He should then consult Grey's "Medical Text for Attorneys" and try to get a general knowledge of the nature of his client's injuries, and of all probable complications or secondary conditions from which the client may suffer as a result of the injury.

He must then look at the law. He must determine to what extent evidence concerning all of these factors will be admissible in the trial of the case. Having studied the charts, medical texts, the law, and considered ways by which to illustrate the medical testimony, he should make a list of questions as an outline for the conference with the doctor. After the appointment has been made, it may be helpful to mail a copy of the questions to the doctor for study before the conference. At the conference the doctor can usually suggest ways in which medical evidence can be presented to the jury in a simple graphic manner.

This brings us to a fascinating phase of trial practice, one which presents a constant challenge to attorneys—and to doctors also. This is the use of what we call "demonstrative evidence." "Demonstrative evidence" is to the lawyer what teaching aids are to the medical expert. By and large, the medical expert who can make the facts clear to the jury is the one who is usually correct and the one most likely to be believed. Thus justice is greatly fostered in personal injury cases by the skillful use of demonstrative evidence. A medical teacher who did not use these aids would be at least 450 years behind the times, and so would the lawyer who tried a personal injury case without them.

Types of demonstrative evidence generally used are: pictures, x-ray films, slides, diagrams and drawings, models of the parts of the body injured, parts of the skeleton, and any apparatus used in treatment, such as slings and traction braces—anything which the jury can see and gain thereby a more concrete understanding of what is said.

It is important at all times for both attorneys and doctors to keep in mind that the sole justification for the use of demonstrative evidence is to illustrate specific testimony.

Following the conference with the doctor, the attorney should draw up the exact questions which he plans to ask the doctor on the witness stand. It is a good idea to send a copy of these questions to the doctor. Having the questions in advance enables him to consider them at leisure and to phrase his answers in such a way as to convey his central conviction clearly and at the same time to include any reservations which he may have.

The interprofessional code points out that the physician should be notified if he is to be subpoened. The usual purpose of serving the doctor with a subpoena is not to force him to go to court against his will, but to enable the attorney to procure a continuance of the case if the doctor is unable to appear in court.

In the most important single section of the code it is clearly set out that under no circumstances should an attorney seek or attempt to have the physician color or shape his expert testimony in such a manner as to favor the interest represented by the attorney. If I accomplish nothing more than to help doctors realize that the great majority of North Carolina attorneys subscribe wholeheartedly to this section of the code, I will be deeply gratified. If this were not true, and if we attorneys did not want doctors to tell the truth as they believe it to be, then all our creative energies would be dedicated to the perpetuation of fraud, and our professional existence would be but a living mockery.

The code also deals with the knotty problem of getting the witnesses, the parties, the attorneys, and all other persons necessary to the trial of a case together at one time. This is one of the great difficulties in a trial, for which I can foresee no practical remedy. Much of the inconvenience to the physician can be relieved, however, by notifying him as far as possible in advance when he will be needed to testify, and by keeping him informed of any changes. So that he will not be kept waiting, it has become the general practice in the courts of our state for the judge to permit the doctor to testify within a few minutes after he arrives in the courtroom, even if this means interrupting the testimony of some other witness.

Item seven of the code deals with cross-examination, which is an important matter of concern to you all. As the code points out, the purpose of cross-examination is not to browbeat the witness. You can rest assured that no judge is going to permit an attorney to abuse the right of cross-examination when a doctor is on the witness-stand. The legitimate purpose of cross-examination is to bring out facts which will reveal to the jury that neither the witness nor his opinions are infallible. In medical testimony this is done by bringing out the fact than an examination could have been more thorough, or that an opinion other than that held by the witness could be consistent with the facts of the case. If, in his conference with the doctor before the trial, the attorney will prepare the doctor for cross-examination, the doctor will be prepared to bring out most of these points on direct examination.

I think it is fair to say that much of the fear of cross-examination is unfounded. Actually, in most lawsuits there is no basic difference of opinion as to the medical aspects of the case, and the major problem in testifying is merely that of presenting medical evidence and medical opinions to the jury in a clear and understandable manner.

The code rightly deals with compensation for services of physicians in medico-legal matters. Happily, the attorneys have finally come to realize that a physician is entitled to reasonable compensation for all professional services rendered. This includes the time and energy spent in furnishing reports, attending conferences, studying the problem of how a technical matter can be demonstrated to the jury, and any time lost from standing by to appear in court. Furthermore, it is now customary for the court to provide for an expert witness fee to be paid out of the court costs a fee which is realistic and in keeping with the actual value of the doctor's time and talents.

Conclusion

The Medico-Legal Interprofessional Code represents a magnificent achievement in spelling out the mutual responsibilities of attorneys and physicians to whom people in need of legal and medical services have turned. If the doctors and attorneys of North Carolina can make this code the solid cornerstone of their working relationship, I sincerely believe that it will be a vital help to the members of both professions as we seek to discharge our mutual obligations to the individual and to society.

The psychic stress that precipitates the formation of a duodenal ulcer may be acute or chronic. The factor of acute stress is seen in such statistics as came out of London during the "blitz." At that time, about three times as many patients were admitted to London hospitals with perforations as in the preceding and succeeding years.

In most instances, it is chronic psychic stress that results in ulcer formation. The common factor of the many forms of such stress is the production of a continuous high level of tension which usually is under excessive personality control and has minimal outlets or release mechanisms. This high level of tension results in overstimulation of the adrenal cortex. The resulting vagal and hormonal stress stimulates the formation of the duodenal ulcer.—Krainer, S. DECEMBER, 1956

As the year's end draws near, it is customary and natural to look back upon its noteworthy events. Recently the so-called Cold War which began soon after the end of World War II flared into a few hot spots. Nevertheless, some reasons for optimism can be found. The prestige of the Soviet Union is much lower at the end of the year than at the beginning, while the prestige of the United Nations is higher. It is true that the relations between the United States and its strongest allies have been strained. The stand of the United States against the invasion of Egypt by Israeli, England, and France, however, proved that our government is consistent in opposing the use of arms until the United Nations has been given a chance to settle quarrels between nations. Furthermore, the United Nations now commands more respect than at any previous time. It may well prove to be the fulfillment of Tennyson's vision of "the Parliament of man, the Federation of the World." It is too soon yet to be sure of the outcome, but at least there is reason for a guardedly optimistic prognosis in the world situation.

Our nation has survived another election. Again the enormous personal popularity of President Eisenhower was demonstrated convincingly — even though both houses of Congress are controlled by Democrats. As was pointed out editorially last month, the fact that the independent voter has become the decisive factor in our national elections is as it should be.

For the first time in many years a governor was elected to succeed himself in North Carolina. The popularity of Governor Hodges was showed by the large vote cast for him.

One of the most constructive measures of Governor Hodge's administration is the proposed revision of North Carolina's present antiquated and inequitable tax structure. It is certain that our present system has discouraged many industries from moving into the state, and has been responsible for sending some of our best citizens out of the state. As a result, our neighboring states are going ahead of North Carolina in many ways.

The recommendations of the Tax Commission appointed during the last Legislature are sound. If enacted into law — as they almost certainly will be — they should make for real progress in the future.

The final result of the Supreme Court's anti-segregation decision remains to be seen. That as yet we have had no violence in our schools is a cause for thankfulness. Let us pray that the final result may be peaceful.

Our State Medical Society has gone as far as possible—even changing its meeting place—in order to give Negro physicians an opportunity to profit from the scientific sessions of the Society. We can only wait to see how this works out.

Medicine continues to advance, even though there are still many unsolved problems. The American Medical Association and our State Society each has the largest number of members in its history.

Advances have been made in the surgery of the heart and blood vessels, as well as in other fields. The Salk vaccine now seems to be safe and effective. It is unfortunate that the premature publicity given it, and the mistakes made in preparing some of the early batches, discouraged many parents—and doctors—from accepting it. Now that the supply is adequate and the vaccine safe, it is not too much to hope that polio will come under control as have diphtheria and pertussis.

With the lessened importance of infections, the degenerative diseases are demanding more and more attention. The increasing proportion of older people is creating a problem that becomes bigger every year. The American Medical Association has recognized its responsibility in the matter by the appointment of a Committee on Aging, and by devoting a whole morning at the Clinical Session in Seattle to a panel discussion on Problems of Aging.

One cause for concern is the increasingly widespread use of antibiotic, steroid, and tranquilizing drugs. These all have their places in the practice of medicine, but should not be used without due consideration.

In this final issue of the year the editorial board and editorial staff of the NORTH CAROLINA MEDICAL JOURNAL extends to our readers the time-honored but heartfelt message: best wishes for Christmas and the New Year!

OUR SCHOOL SYSTEM

From the beginning of our republic, education has been recognized as a cornerstone of our representative form of government. The survival of the most nearly true form of democracy that the world has ever know is credited to the widespread educational program which has prevailed since the Founding Fathers gave the blueprints for our nation's future growth.

At one time the people of the South were afraid of universal education. The education of the Negro slave was forbidden by law. Fortunately the injustice and inhumanity of that narrow, prejudiced view was recognized long ago, and the white people of the South have contributed more than those of any other section to provide schools for Negroes as well as whites, and attendance has been required by law of all the children of both races between 6 and 16 years of age.

That the school system is far from perfect is evidenced by such scathing criticism as appeared in the September Ladies' Home Journal. An editorial and two articles by teachers, in addition to a panel discussion by a number of prominent educators, all pointed out the grave defects in our public schools all over the nation.

It is to be hoped that the present furor over segregation and integration will not distract the attention of those responsible for the standards of our elementary and high schools. It may be that the threat to the school system of our state will serve to focus attention upon failure of the elementary and high school to prepare students for higher education in our colleges and universities.

Certainly the cruel and vindictive mobsters who are doing their best to defy the law by intimidating a few frightened Negroes are not good advertisements for our present school system.

THE MEDICO-LEGAL INTERPROFESSIONAL CODE

One of the most important of the many accomplishments of Dr. James P. Rousseau's administration was the appointment of a joint committee from the North Carolina Bar Association and the State Medical Society to formulate a code for the guidance of both lawyers and physicians in dealing with litigation involving personal injury.

The members of the committee from the Bar Association were:

Kester Walton, Asheville, chairman
Fred Folger, Mount Airy
Joseph C. Moore, Jr., Raleigh
Armistead Sapp, Greensboro
John Small, Charlotte
Frank E. Winslow, Rocky Mount

The physician members were:

T. S. Raiford, M.D., Asheville, chairman
R. L. Garrard, M.D., Greensboro
Thomas W. Baker, M.D., Charlotte
John F. Owen, M.D., Raleigh
K. B. Pace, M.D., Greenville
Bennette B. Pool, M.D., Winston-Salem

The code which this committee recommended has been unanimously approved by both the State Bar Association and the State Medical Society, and copies of it have been sent to every member of the Society.

Attorney William Thorp, Jr., of Rocky Mount discussed the code before the Edgecombe-Nash County Medical Society at its September meeting. His address was so favorably received that, at the suggestion of a doctor, it was sent to this JOURNAL for publication. It will be found on page 564 of this issue.

DR. WILLIAM A. MARLOWE

Dr. William A. Marlowe of Walstonburg, who died on September 29, deserved a tribute for the heroism which he displayed in overcoming a handicap that would have discouraged most men from attempting to practice medicine. Soon after he was graduated from Jefferson Medical College in 1919, his hearing began to fail rapidly as the result of chronic otitis media, which began during his student days. For a time a hearing aid gave some help, but by 1934 it was useless, and for the rest of his life he was totally deaf. He learned to read lips, however, and to use his remaining senses more. "He began to notice the little gestures, the movements of the eyes, the facial expressions of the sick as compared to the well. He noticed the movement of the mouth and lips, the gait and posture of the body, the nervous symptoms and the general attitude of the patient. He began to pick up sounds by hands on the chest while the patients were talking or breathing."

In spite of his deafness, Dr. Marlowe built and maintained a good practice. He also managed a 500-acre farm, and had taken an active part in his church and community, as well as in his county and State Medical Societies. It has been said of him that he was perhaps the only man in North Carolina who ever practiced general medicine for 22 years without hearing a sound of any kind, and did it successfully.

Dr. Marlowe has left a proud heritage for his family. It is good to know that his youngest son has begun the study of medicine. May God grant him a goodly portion of his father's courage, and spare him from his father's handicap.

HELP FOR THE HOPELESS

The Rhode Island Medical Journal for September published a unique and helpful forum which was presented at the annual meeting of the Rhode Island chapter of the Academy of General Practice. Dr. C. A. Smith talked of the attitude to be taken toward infants and children with fatal diseases, or who are mentally defective.

Dr. Earle M. Chapman discussed the case of the one who, in the prime of life, is found to have relentless congestive heart failure or such an incurable disease as leukemia, metastatic cancer, or Hodgkin's Disease.

The final discussion, "Making a Graceful Exit," was to have been presented by Dr. Peter Pineo Chase, who died shortly before the forum was presented. Very fittingly, his colleague, Dr. Irving A. Beck, who took his place, quoted from a draft of the talk Dr. Chase was to have made. Dr. Chase's closing sentences were:

> Even in this era of wonders, the great majority of ills of the flesh are either self-limited or are going to progress despite all our scientific knowledge. Humbly bearing this in mind, let us help nature, when we can, to expedite cures; with discretion let us keep our hands off unless we see a reasonable chance of helping, and with fervor and kindliness help our hopeless friends to progress smoothly and gracefully through their last exit.

Dr. Chase's friends will agree wholeheartedly with Dr. Beck's comment that in his last illness he lived out the philosophy summarized in his final message and that "Certainly no man ever made a more graceful exit from life."

President's Message

MEDICARE

On June 7, 1956, the President of the United States signed Public Law 569 authorizing medical care for the dependents of members of the uniformed services to become effective December 7, 1956. "The purpose of this act is to create and maintain high morale throughout the uniformed services by providing an improved and uniform program of medical care for members of the uniformed services and their dependents."

The uniformed services include not only the military service but the uniformed Public Health Service, Coast and Geodetic Survey, and the Coast Guard. The Department of Defense is the administrative agent for the military services, and the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare for the other uniformed services.

On July 28, 1956, a meeting was held in Chicago between representatives of the Department of Defense Task Force, the American Medical Association, and the various state and territorial medical societies. The representatives left this meeting with a very positive impression of the willingness of the Department of Defense to cooperate with the medical profession and of the desire to have the actual professional management of the program as much in the hands of the profession as feasible. Representatives were requested to obtain from their state and territorial groups a statement of willingness to furnish home town medical care under the program; to designate a fiscal agent for the administration of the program for that unit; and to furnish a tentative fee schedule for the unit.

On September 30, 1956, the Executive Committee of the Medical Society of the State of North Carolina approved the recommendations of its Medicare Committee as follows:

(1). That the Department of Defense be notified through the A.M.A. that the Medical Society of the State of North Carolina would participate in and cooperate with the program for furnishing dependents medical care and that the Hospital Savings Association be designated as the fiscal agent for the State.

(2). That a tentative fee schedule be presented comparable to that of the $6,000 limit of the North Carolina Doctors' Plan of Blue Shield, this tentative fee schedule to be presented after some inequities were corrected by the Medicare Committee and consultants from the various speciality groups appointed by the President of the State Medical Society.

On October 29, 1956, a delegation from the Medical Society of the State of North Carolina met in Washington with a group from the Department of Defense and signed a contract for the implementation of the program from December 7, 1956, to July 1, 1957. On November 11, 1956, the state Medicare Committee met in Raleigh with the appointed representatives from the various speciality groups and a tentative fee schedule, seemingly satisfactory to those groups, was prepared. On November 18, 1956, a delegation from the Medical Society of the State of North Carolina presented this fee schedule to representatives of the Department of Defense in Washington. With some give and take on both sides, the fee schedule was contracted for in order to start the program on December 7, 1956. This fee schedule is subject to change, with the approval of both parties, and is contracted for until July 1, 1957.

Implementation of this program has been an enormous task for the Department of Defense, the A.M.A., and the state and territorial medical societies. Many mistakes have been made, and many inequities still exist. The work has been done with a resolve on the part of all three groups to protect the traditional patient-physician relationship and to maintain local medical customs and practices.

Only wives and children are eligible for dependent care in civilian facilities. It has been emphasized by the Department of Defense that this group, estimated at 800,000 at the onset of the program, will have full and free choice between civilian and military services.

At the meeting in Chicago in July, the Department of Defense left the distinct impression that these dependents were to be classed not as a limited income group, but as average pay patients. Recently in Washington, representatives of the Department of Defense stated that more than 82 per cent of service men eligible for this program had an income of less than $4,300 per annum and should be classified as a limited income group. The Department of Defense has used the California Medical Association's relative value schedule as a national guide for setting fees. In some instances, the fee set was between the North Carolina Blue Shield Program limit of $4,200 and the $6,000 limit. However, in even more instances, a slightly higher fee than the North Carolina $6,000 program has been set. It is believed by those representatives of the Medical Society of the State of North Carolina who cooperated with the Department of Defense in setting the fee that the schedule agreed upon is equitable and fair for both doctors and patients. There will be many instances in difficult and complicated cases where the fee set cannot be used, but charges will have to be made by report. It is incumbent upon the medical profession of this entire country to consider the public relations value of cooperating with this program and of preventing abuses of it.

Under this program, outpatient care is furnished in military hospitals but not in civilian hospitals. However, full coverage for maternity cases is provided. Chronic diseases are not provided for except in acute exacerbations of the disease. All in all, the program is designed to furnish emergency service to the dependents of the Armed and Uniformed Services of this country. It is essentially a good program and will continue to be good for the medical profession as long as the profession maintains and deserves to maintain control of it.

A.M.A. Plans New TV Aids for Medical Societies

Familiar nursery rhyme characters like "Humpty Dumpty" and "Jack and Jill" are teaming up with the medical profession to bring worthwhile health information to the American people over local television stations during 1957. The A.M.A.'s Bureau of Health Education currently is experimenting with animated filmed cartoons which feature the latest word on such aspects of health as safety, first aid, food preservation, immunization, cold prevention, nutrition and long life. Each 22-second sound TV film ends with the line: "This is a health message from Blank County Medical Society and the American Medical Association." A number of pilot placements have already been arranged in various parts of the country.

NEWS NOTES FROM THE DUKE UNIVERSITY SCHOOL OF MEDICINE

A young man from Free China now studying here at Duke Hospital will return to his native country next September to head the first centralized medical record library in the Orient.

His name is Shih-ching Huang. Brought to America by the International Cooperation Administration, he now is gaining knowledge that will better equip him for the post of medical record librarian at Taiwan National University Hospital and will enable him to train other Taiwanese in this profession.

A recent survey of Duke University medical alumni bears out national statistics that reveal internal medicine and general surgery as the largest specialized fields of medical practice.

Some 300 M.D.'s who were graduated from the Duke School of Medicine during the five-year period 1945-1949 were queried by the school's secretary as to their present occupations.

Nearly 23 per cent are now practicing internal medicine, while 17 per cent are general surgeons. Pediatrics claims 12 per cent of the doctors.

Next in line are general practice, with 8 per cent; obstetrics-gynecology, 6 per cent; psychiatry, dermatology and orthopaedics, about 5 per cent each; and urology, nearly 4 per cent.

Specialities with participation of less than 3 per cent each include eye, ear, nose and throat; radiology; anatomy; bacteriology; pathology; neurosurgery; anesthesia; cardiology; hematology; and neurology.

News Notes from the University of North Carolina School of Medicine

A number of faculty members of the U.N.C. School of Medicine participated in the annual meeting of the Southern Medical Association in Washington, D. C. from November 12 through 15. They are shown below in the order of the day they appeared on the program.

Tuesday, November 13

Dr. Doris C. Grosskreutz, assistant professor of surgery, and others presented a paper on "Transtracheal Analgesia: Its Place in Anesthesiology."

Dr. John Sessions, assistant professor of medicine, gave a paper on "Potassium Depletion with Renal and Disfunction Resulting in Habitual Use of Laxatives."

Dr. Robert Ross, professor and head of the Department of Obstetrics and Gynecology, served as chairman of the Section on Obstetrics Tuesday and Wednesday, November 13 and 14.

"The Result of Cataract Extraction Following Filtering Operations" was the subject of a paper by Dr. Samuel D. McPherson, Jr. The paper was delivered in conjunction with Dr. George W. Fisher of Durham. Dr. McPherson is clinical associate professor of surgery.

"The Diagnostic Accuracy of Plain Films in Bronchiectasis" was the subject of a paper by Dr. William H. Sprunt III, associate professor of Radiology.

Wednesday, November 14

Dr. Joseph M. Hitch, clinical associate professor of medicine discussed a paper on "Hydroxyzine Dihydrochloride Catarax" by Dr. Harry M. Robinson, Jr. and Dr. John F. Strahan, both of Baltimore, Maryland.

"Furantin in Urinary Tract Infections: Long Term Results" was the topic of a paper by Drs. Louis C. Roberts and Jack Hughes, both clinical instructors in surgery. This paper was presented with Dr. W. M. Coppridge of Durham.

Thursday, November 15

Drs. Claude A. Tait and Norman O. Reese, residents in anesthesiology, gave a paper on "A Comparative Study of Local Anesthetic Drugs with Specific Reference to Tissue Irritancy." Dr. David Davis, professor of surgery collaborated in preparing the paper.

Dr. Grosskreutz discussed a paper delivered by Drs. D. L. Crandell and W. G. Page of Winston-Salem on "The Comatose Patient."

Dr. Thomas W. Farmer, professor of neurological medicine, served as a member of a panel that discussed "Common Neurological Problems, Recent Advances in Their Interpretation and Management." Dr. Farmer's field was epilepsy.

Dr. Nathan A. Womack, professor and head of the Department of Surgery, and Dr. Robert Zeppa, resident, gave a paper on "Carcinoma of the Gall Bladder: Attempt at Experimental Induction."

Dr. Warfield Garson, research professor and head of the Department of Experimental Medicine, School of Public Health, spoke on "Treponemal Test for Syphilis."

Two scientific exhibits were arranged at the meeting by University of North Carolina faculty members.

Dr. Hitch prepared an exhibit on "The Uses of Liquefied Gases in the Treatment of Skin Disorders."

Drs. Roberts and Hughes and Dr. Virgil I. Mann of the Department of Geology had an exhibit on "Analysis of Urinary Calculi by Optical Crystallography."

Of the 117 students entering the three medical schools of North Carolina in the fall of 1955, 65 students or 56 per cent of the students enrolled at the University of North Carolina School of Medicine.

These facts were brought out in a recent report by the Council on Medical Education and Hospitals of the American Medical Association.

A total of 150 North Carolina residents began the study of medicine. These 65 students who entered the University of North Carolina School of Medicine represented 43 per cent of the total state residents who entered medical school.

Of the 150 North Carolina students entering medical school last year, a total of 33 enrolled in out-of-state schools.

Approximately 70 invited participants throughout the United States, England, and Canada attended the opening sessions of the Ross Laboratory Pediatric Research Conference at the University of North Carolina School of Medicine on November 8.

The conference was held under the auspices of the Departments of Pediatrics of the Schools of Medicine of the University of North Carolina, Duke University, and the Bowman Gray School of Medicine.

The first two session of the conference were held at the University of North Carolina School of Medicine, with the final sessions being held at the Duke University School of Medicine on November 9.

Honorary chairman of the conference was Dr.

Grover F. Powers, emeritus professor Department of Pediatrics of Yale University.

The chairman of the conference was Dr. Edward C. Curnen of the University of North Carolina. Co-chairmen were Dr. Jerome S. Harris of Duke and Dr. Weston M. Kelsey of the Bowman Gray School of Medicine.

Dr. William P. Richardson, assistant dean of continuation education, has announced plans for postgraduate medical courses in the First District and Greenville for January, February and March.

The First District program will meet alternately in Ahoskie, Edenton, and Elizabeth City on Wednesday afternoons and evenings beginning January 23. Dr. L. P. Williams is chairman of the planning committee for the meetings at Edenton, with Dr. Dan P. Boyette at Ahoskie, and Dr. Zack D. Owens at Elizabeth City. The Edenton meetings are tentatively scheduled to be held at the Nurses' Home of the Chowan Hospital. The Ahoskie meeting will be at the Nurses' Home of the Roanoke-Chowan Hospital, and the Elizabeth City Programs will be held at the Camden Yacht Club.

The Greenville program will meet at the Greenville Golf and Country Club on Thursday afternoons and evenings beginning January 24. Dr. John L. Watters is chairman of the planning committee for the Greenville meetings.

Three senior research fellowships totaling $164,000 have been awarded the University of North Carolina by the National Institutes of Health of the U. S. Public Health Service.

Dr. W. Reece Berryhill, Dean of the University of North Carolina School of Medicine, was notified of the awards recently. The funds are to be used to support the teaching of the basic sciences to medical and dental students.

The three fellowships are for a five-year period and are renewable at the end of that time. The money will be used for salaries and research.

The request for the fellowships was a joint one from the University of North Carolina Schools of Medicine and Dentistry. The School of Medicine teaches basic science courses to dental students. The grants become effective January 1, 1957.

The three named for the awards are Dr. R. D. Langdell, assistant professor of pathology, now on active duty as Research Officer at the Walter Reed Army Hospital Institute of Research; Dr. Billy Baggett, now instructor of chemistry at Harvard Medical School and assistant in medicine at the Biochemical Research Laboratory of the Massachusetts General Hospital, Boston; and Dr. Ira Fowler, assistant professor of anatomy.

Rare medical books and the history of medicine were presented to TV audiences over WUNC-TV, Channel 4, Friday, November 23.

This was the third in the current series of "Project Health" programs staged by the University of North Carolina Division of Health Affairs.

This is the second year that the series has been presented. Last year it was considered one of the most popular programs to originate at the Chapel Hill studio.

The title of the show was "The Storehouse of Medical Knowledge." It showed how the medical library of the Division of Health Affairs is operated and used. The program originated live from the Division of Health Affairs library in the Clinic Building of the School of Medicine.

Dr. John Dewey Dorsett of the Department of Medicine of the University of North Carolina School of Medicine recently presented a paper before the Annual Scientific Sessions of the American Heart Association meeting in Cincinnati.

The title of the paper was "A Critical Evaluation of Drug Therapy in Hypertension."

The paper was prepared by Dr. Dorsett, Dr. James E. Woods, Dr. Kerr White and Dr. Rueben Hill, all of the University of North Carolina faculty.

The Obstetrics-Gynecology Travel Club of the Medical College of Virginia visited the University of North Carolina campus on November 23. Their host for the one-day meeting was the Department of Obstetrics and Gynecology.

Mecklenburg County Chapter of the North Carolina Academy of General Practice

The Mecklenburg County Chapter of the North Academy of General Practice sponsored a symposium on Abdominal Conditions in Charlotte, November 8. Dr. Coy C. Carpenter, dean of the Bowman Gray School of Medicine of Wake Forest College, was moderator of the morning session, and Dr. W. P. Richardson, assistant dean for Continuation Education, University of North Carolina

School of Medicine, was moderator for the afternoon session. Speakers included: Drs. J. P. Nesselrod, Northwestern University; Paul S. Rhoads, Northwestern University; Orvar Swenson, Tufts University School of Medicine; N. Frederick Hicken, University of Utah School of Medicine; Lewis I. Post, Tulane University School of Medicine; and Frederic D. Zeman, Columbia University College of Physicians and Surgeons.

Dr. John P. Harloe is president of the chapter.

North Carolina Chapter, American College of Surgeons

The first annual meeting of the North Carolina Chapter of the American College of Surgeons will meet at 11:00 a.m., in the amphitheater of the engineering building at Duke University, Saturday, January 5, 1957. From 8:00 a.m. until 11:00 a.m., both Duke and Watts Hospitals will have their operating viewing stands open to the members of the chapter. Following a luncheon in the ball room of the student's union of Duke, the business session will begin at 2:30 p.m., with the president of the chapter, Dr. William H. Sprunt of Winston-Salem, presiding. There will be a reception of all members and their wives at the Hope Valley Country Club from 5:00 to 6:30 p.m.

North Carolina State Board of Medical Examiners

The Board of Medical Examiners of the State of North Carolina will meet on January 14, 1957, at 9 a.m. at the Barringer Hotel, Charlotte, at which time applicants for licensure by endorsement of credentials will be interviewed.

Randolph County Medical Society

The Randolph County Medical Society met November 26, at the Randolph Hospital in Asheboro for their annual meeting.

Officers for 1957 were elected as follows: Hugh Fitzpatrick III, M.D., president; John Cochran, M.D., vice president; Willis H. Fowle III, secretary-treasurer.

Robeson County Medical Society

The Robeson County Medical Society held its monthly meeting November 5, at the Lorraine Hotel, Lumberton. The scientific program was a Clinical Pathological Conference presented by Dr. Dan Donovan, Department of Internal Medicine, and discussed by Dr. George Penick, Department of Pathology, University of North Carolina Medical School, Chapel Hill.

Edgecombe-Nash Medical Society

The November meeting of the Edgecombe-Nash Medical Society was held in Tarboro at the Country Club on November 14. Dr. Raymond Adams, neurologist at the Medical College of Virginia, spoke on "The Aspects of Vascular Disease in the Central Nervous System."

Forsyth County Medical Society

The Forsyth County Medical Society and Bar Association met jointly on Tuesday, November 13, at the Robert E. Lee Hotel in Winston-Salem. A panel discussion on Medical and Legal and Public Relations was led by Dr. Frank Mayfield of Cincinnati, Ohio.

News Notes

Dr. S. Booker Dillard has announced the opening of his office for the practice of dermatology at 1012 Kings Drive, Charlotte.

Dr. Francis A. Stewart has opened office for the general practice of medicine at 2206 Patterson Avenue in Winston-Salem.

Stuart McGuire Lecture Series and Symposium

Dr. Andre F. Cournand, professor of medicine, Columbia University College of Physicians and Surgeons, will deliver the twenty-eighth annual Stuart McGuire Lectures at the Medical College of Virginia in Richmond on January 23 and 24 at 8:00 p.m. On January 23 he will speak on "Validity and Values of Methods for the Study of the Dynamics of the Circulation in Relation to Cardiac Surgery," and on January 24 his subject will be "Control of the Pulmonary Circulation in Man."

The lectures will be given in conjunction with a symposium on cardiology and cardiac surgery to be held January 24 and 25. All lectures will be held in Baruch Auditorium of the Egyptian Building at the Medical College of Virginia.

There is no charge for the McGuire lectures themselves. There will be a charge of $5.00 for the symposium, except to faculty members of the Medical College of Virginia and the Medical Division of the University of Virginia, medical students, and house officers of any hospital.

Southern Regional Educational Board

Dr. Wilfred Bloomberg, Boston psychiatrist, has been selected to head the South's Regional Program in Mental Health Training and Research, conducted by the Southern Regional Education Board in Atlanta.

Dr. Bloomberg, who is chief, Psychiatry and Neurology Service, Veterans' Administration Hospital in Boston, will assume his duties officially on January 1, 1957.

News Notes from the American Medical Association

A.M.A. Schedules "Nomenclature" Institutes in 1957

Plans have been announced by the American Medical Association to conduct two—and possibly three—short courses on the use of the Standard Nomenclature of Diseases and Operations during 1957. The first Institute will be held March 11-13 in Roanoke, Virginia, and the second August 5-7 in San Francisco. A third session probably will be scheduled in the fall. All of these three-day meetings are conducted by the A.M.A. as a special service to medical record librarians and others using the Nomenclature in the hospital, doctor's office or medical clinic.

Registration for each session is limited to the first 100 applicants and is not restricted to registered medical record librarians. Anyone contemplating the installation of the system or already using it and employed as a clinic clerk, doctor's secretary or receptionist, nurse or physician may attend. Tuition is free. Applications should be sent to Mrs. Hayden at A.M.A. Headquarters, Chicago.

Nation to Observe "Medical Education Week" In April

Attention of the nation will be focused on the achievements of U. S. medical schools during Medical Education Week, April 21-27. Sponsors of the Week, whose representatives met recently to develop program plans for national and local participation, are the Association of American Medical Colleges, the American Medical Association, the Student American Medical Association, the Woman's Auxiliary to the A.M.A., the American Medical Education Foundation, and the National Fund for Medical Education. Each of the sponsoring organizations is preparing suggested activity formats for state and county medical societies, medical schools and allied groups. These materials will be distributed early in January.

A.M.A. Studies Uniform Chemical Labeling Law

A program to protect the public from the dangers of mislabeled household and commercial chemicals recently was launched by the American Medical Association. Through its Committee on Toxicology, the A.M.A. is gathering information on existing state labeling regulations with the idea of developing model legislation on the precautionary labeling of various chemical products—such as paints and paint removers, heating and cooking fuels, household polishers and cleansers, and laundering items—which are not now so regulated. The end result would serve as a guide for writing uniform regulations requiring labels to show information on the product's contents, its possible dangers, directions for safe use, and first aid instructions.

Bernard E. Conley, Ph.D., committee secretary, reports that there are at least a quarter of a million different trade-name substances now on the market. Without proper labeling, both physicians and the public may be uninformed about harmful materials these products contain and the ways of treating poisonings from them.

Other organizations, including the American Academy of Pediatrics, American Public Health Association, American Pharmaceutical Association, National Safety Council, leading trade associations, and various state and national governmental regulatory agencies are being consulted on this problem and its solution.

A.M.A. Develops Radio Series on Surgery

The drama of modern surgery will be highlighted in a new series of radio transcriptions which the American Medical Association currently is preparing for use over local stations. The general public will be able to hear on-the-spot descriptions of actual surgical procedures performed by eminent surgeons in 13 different areas, such as abdominal, brain or chest surgery. While performing a regular operation, the surgeon will comment on his movements in terms which the average person will understand. Afterwards, the doctor will be interviewed on new developments in his special field.

This series, a replacement for one produced a few years ago, is being prepared by the Bureau of Health Education in consultation with the officers of the A.M.A. Section on Surgery. The 13-program series will be available for placement on radio stations by local medical societies about March 1.

A.M.A. Rural Health Meeting Set for March

"Together We Build" will be the theme of the A.M.A.'s Twelfth National Conference on Rural Health to be held March 7-9 at the Brown Hotel, Louisville, Kentucky. Principal subjects to be discussed include: The need for frequent and thorough physical examinations; the impact of modern living; rural economics in relation to health, and the migrant labor problem. Time for discussion from the floor is being allotted. Sponsored by the Council on Rural Health, this year's Conference will begin at 10 a.m. Thursday, March 7, and wind up at noon on Saturday.

A.M.A. Publishes "Today's Health" Index

A boon for physicians and their wives who from time to time are called upon to give health talks before nonmedical groups is the new Cumulative Index to Today's Health magazine, published by the American Medical Association. During the period from January, 1950, through December, 1955, more than 1,475 articles appeared in Today's Health. These articles now have been classified under 33 headings ranging from athletics to vacation and leisure. This valuable reference guide may be purchased from the Order Department for 50 cents per copy.

A.M.A. Congress Stresses Health on the Job

Safeguarding the worker's health will be the chief consideration of representatives of labor, management, government, and the medical profession at the seventeenth annual Congress on Industrial Health to be held February 4-6 at the Biltmore Hotel, Los Angeles. Sponsored by the A.M.A.'s Council on Industrial Health, the Congress is open to all physicians, nurses, industrial hygienists, engineers, and others interested in occupational health.

A special session on "Vision in Industry" will be presented Monday afternoon, February 4, and Tuesday morning, February 5, in cooperation with the National Society for the Prevention of Blindness.

Advance reservations should be made for these tours, since space is limited. Further information may be secured from the Council.

A.M.E.F. State Chairmen to Meet January 27

The 1957 fund drive of the American Medical Education Foundation for the nation's medical schools will officially open with a meeting for state chairmen on Sunday, January 27, at the Drake Hotel, Chicago. Emphasis at this sixth annual meeting will be on the exchange of ideas and the formation of suggested developments for the A.M.E.F. New work kits will be distributed to state chairmen along with other materials which will be available to county chairmen and committeemen. Each state may send one delegate although any physicians interested in this effort are more than welcome to attend.

Harvard School of Public Health

The Harvard School of Public Health takes pleasure in announcing its scholarship program for 1957-1958.

This scholarship program, inaugurated in 1954-1955, is designed to encourage graduates in medicine, dentistry, veterinary medicine, public health nursing, and other health specialties to further their education or seek careers in the field of public health and preventive medicine.

United Cerebral Palsy

Dr. Louis B. Flexner, professor of anatomy and chairman of the Department of Anatomy at the University of Pennsylvania School of Medicine, Philadelphia, is the 1956 recipient of the United Cerebral Palsy—Max Weinstein Award.

The award, consisting of $1,000 and a plaque, was presented to Dr. Flexner at the seventh annual convention of United Cerebral Palsy Associations by Dr. H. Houston Merritt of Columbia University, who is Chairman of the UCP Medical-Professional Advisory Board.

American College of Surgeons

An intensive course on fractures and other trauma will be offered to all interested members of the medical profession by the Chicago Regional Committee on Trauma of the American College of Surgeons. The course will be held for three and one-half days, from April 10 to 13, 1957, at the John B. Murphy Auditorium, 50 East Erie Street, Chicago.

Rehabilitation Center Institute

The Conference of Rehabilitation Centers, Inc., has announced an Institute on Rehabilitation Center Planning to be held at the Morrison Hotel in Chicago from February 25 through March 1, 1957. The Institute will be open to all persons interested in the establishment, expansion, or improvement of comprehensive rehabilitation facilities, and is being conducted by the Conference under a training contract with the U. S. Office of Vocational Rehabilitation.

The faculty for the Institute will be composed of top professional center personnel from this country and from Canada. Major addresses will be delivered by outstanding national rehabilitation authorities, and a staff of consultants from related fields will also participate.

Inquiries concerning the Institute should be addressed to the Division of Special Projects, Conference of Rehabilitation Centers, Inc., 5 Franklin Avenue, Saranac Lake, New York.

The John and Mary R. Markle Foundation

The Markle Foundation has announced that it will continue for the tenth year its program of five-year grants for young medical school faculty members seeking careers in academic medicine. The fund's Grants for Scholars in Medical Science were first offered in 1948 to give academic security and financial help to selected teachers and investigators. During the nine years of the program a total of $5,320,000 has been appropriated toward the support of 181 doctors in 69 medical schools in the United States and Canada.

John M. Russell, executive director and vice president, has reviewed the program in the annual report of the foundation, issued recently. All but four of the Scholars "are active in academic medicine and are doing their part to improve teaching and research in medical science."

International College of Surgeons

A $1,000 contribution to aid Hungarian refugees in Austria was cabled November 18 by the International College of Surgeons following the receipt of an appealing letter from its Austrian Chapter, with offices in Vienna.

Academy of Medicine of Cincinnati

The Academy of Medicine of Cincinnati will hold its One Hundredth Birthday Party, February 27 through March 5, 1957. In observance of the occasion, a Health Museum and Exposition will be established in Cincinnati's spacious and historic Music Hall. One hundred and seventy-five health and scientific exhibits, representing medicine, hospitals, research centers, public health, nursing, pharmacy and industry will be displayed in the north and south halls. Notable among these exhibits and occupying some 4,000 square feet of space, will be an atomic energy exhibit from the American Museum of Atomic Energy entitled "Atoms for Peace."

Dr. Paul D. White and Dr. Walter Alvarez, noted medical scientists and authors, will be among the distinguished guest speakers.

The Centennial Convocation will be held on the last night of the Exposition, March 5, 1957. The Convocation address will be given by Sir Edward Appleton, Nobel Laureate, Edinburgh, Scotland, and civic leaders, officials of both the American and State Medical Associations, and Government dignitaries will take part in the elaborate ceremonies.

BOOK REVIEWS

Management of Addictions. Edited by Edward Podolsky, M.D. 413 pages. Price, $7.50. New York: Philosophical Library, 1955.

This book is a collection of 35 papers on addictions of various types. It is divided into two parts—Part One, "Alcoholic Addiction," and Part Two, "Drug Addiction." All these articles have been previously published in various journals, but one cannot find the date or the name of the publications in which they originally appeared. It is obvious from the contents, however, that the majority were published several years ago. For example, in the chapter entitled, "A Clinical Evaluation of Tetraethyliuramdisulphide in the Treatment of Problem Drinkers" appears the statement: "This drug is still classified as a 'new drug' under the Federal Food and Drug Act and is not yet available for prescription use, since the indications, contraindications, and complications of the medication have not yet been definitely established." Of course this particular drug has been available for prescription use for about five years.

Several of the articles pertaining to alcoholism stress the theory that alcoholism is either a "genatotrophic disease" or a disease of "nutritional deficiency resulting from inherited peculiarities in the chemistry of metabolism." Other papers stress hypoadrenocorticism as a cause of alcoholism or drug addiction, and adrenal cortical extract is advocated for the treatment of both conditions. The aversion condition reflex method of therapy is reported with good results, but follow-up over a period of time is not adequate.

Unfortunately too many theories of the theories concerning the causes of alcoholism stress the remote possibility of physiologic factors, and not enough stress the psychologic factors in both cause and treatment. Also, the book is too repetitious.

Other papers give good information concerning

MATERNAL DEATHS IN NORTH CAROLINA
SINCE JANUARY 1, 1956
EACH DOT REPRESENTS ONE DEATH

the treatment of post-intoxication states and the general problem of alcoholism. None of the so-called tranquilizing drugs are discussed, however.

The papers on drug addiction deal mainly with opiates, although some of the barbiturates, benzedrine, and a few other drugs are mentioned. There are some good papers dealing with the hospital treatment of the addict, group psychotherapy, and some generalities concerning drugs. No adequate discussion of withdrawal therapy is presented.

Generally this volume is only a repetition of the more widely used methods of treatment of the past few years. Many papers are outdated, and others offer theories of questionable value. To a general practitioner it may be confusing. The book has a questionable value as a source of reference for a practitioner of medicine. Its value as a teaching tool is somewhat better.

Textbook of Medical Physiology. By Arthur C. Guyton, M.D. 1,030 pages, with illustrations. Price, $13.50. Philadelphia and London: W. B. Saunders and Company, 1956.

Rapid expansion of medical knowledge has brought with it a fragmentation of medical literature. Sir William Osler could carry his text through many editions with little outside help, but even short contributions to the modern literature may require several co-authors. Dr. Arthur C. Guyton has essayed to check this trend by writing his own "Textbook of Medical Physiology." His book is an excellent example of the benefits and shortcomings of such a method.

The author writes well and chooses exemplary illustrations; his learning is wide and enviable. Yet his effort seems to this reviewer to fall short of its purpose, so admirably stated in the preface. The defects are not so much in the field of physiology as in the discussion of the application of this knowledge to clinical medicine.

For example, an accurate description of acid base balance is followed throughout the text by the assumption that cation is base and anion is acid. It may be obvious to many that the release of chloride from ammonium chloride causes acidosis, but not to this reviewer. Also the treatment suggested for transfusion reaction is open to question. The real danger of overhydration of patients in such straits is not brought out, and the dangers during the diuretic phase of recovery from renal shutdown are not sufficiently emphasized. Likewise, it is highly doubtful that extracellular fluid sodium deficit alone kills the patient with Addison's disease. Certainly, also, one would expect coarctation of the aorta to be mentioned in the discussion of clinical hypertension. And finally, one cannot agree that respiratory alkalosis is rare; the hyperventilation of anxiety is commonly productive of this disorder, and the "drawing spells" of this condition are well known to most practitioners, although the contributions to it of overbreathing and tetany less so.

The author is to be congratulated on a noble effort. It almost achieves its goal.

The Lung. Clinical Physiology and Pulmonary Function Tests. By Julius H. Comroe, Jr., Robert E. Forster, II, Arthur B. Dubois, William A. Briscoe, and Elizabeth Carlsen. 219 pages. Price. $5.50. Chicago, Illinois: The Year Book Publishers, 1956.

The advantages of teamwork are well brought out in The Lung, Clinical Physiology and Pulmonary Function Tests. Here the aims of the authors are less expansive and, if anything, the promise of the preface is exceeded. The descriptions of pulmonary physiology are unsurpassed, while the figures can stand in many instances without references to text material. More complicated data are isolated in an appendix, and there is a most helpful section on clinical application of lung function tests.

This monograph cannot be too highly recommended to those interested in the field of lung function.

Handbook of Pediatric Medical Emergencies. By Adolph G. DeSanctias, M.D., and Charles Varga, M.D. 389 pages. Price, $6.25. St. Louis: C. V. Mosby Company, 1956.

This well written book contains chapters on emergencies of the cardiovascular, metabolic, genitourinary, neurologic and respiratory systems, care of the premature infant, drowning, poisoning, miscellaneous emergencies, and pediatric procedures. It was prepared for members of the resident staff, and much of the text was rewritten for this second edition.

The book is a concise discussion, concerned primarily with therapy, and is a definite asset in the physician's library.

Paper Electrophoresis. (Ciba Foundation Symposium) Edited by G. E. Wolstenholme and Elaine C. P. Millar, 224 pages. Little Brown & Company, Boston, Massachusetts. 1956.

Electrophoresis in solid media has undergone a phenomenal development since 1949. More than 4,000 reports have been published in the literature and three volumes devoted to the technique are available. The popularity of the procedure has been due in part to the relatively inexpensive equipment and to the volume of individual determinations that could be made in a short time interval by a single worker utilizing very small quantities of protein solution.

Many variables encountered in the use of the technique include factors which influence the mobility of proteins. Physical characteristics of the solid media, evaporation, temperature and pH changes during the course of the study, adsorption of the proteins, and chromatographic effects have all contributed to difficulties in measurements of mobility. Quantitative determinations of the individual components of a mixture of proteins have been difficult, owing to the above factors and such additional difficulties as variability in the binding of dyes by different proteins, glycoproteins, mucoproteins, lipoproteins, and other electrophoretically separable materials.

It was inevitable that so many investigators entering an unexplored field simultaneously should each develop his own technology with the aim of minimizing the effect of these variables. A very high proportion of the published reports on the subject of filter paper electrophoresis have dealt with methodology, and each investigator has been reasonably successful in developing techniques which gave reproducible results for his particular problem.

These techniques are functional primarily because they reproduce a variable factor to the same degree, but they do not permit a ready interchange of method from one problem to another. This situation has resulted in tremendous variations in apparatus design, reagents, and methods. The CIBA Foundation Symposium on this subject is therefore a most timely and welcome addition to the literature. Those who participated in the conference have been pioneers in the field, and the presentations on apparatus, general methods, and techniques are most welcome. The discussion of these subjects is enlightening, and should go far toward developing standard procedures for this important field.

The volume will have its greatest appeal to the investigator, but the subject matter is so ably presented that clinicians who may be called upon to interpret data obtained by this method will find the book most interesting and instructive.

Dictionary of Poisons. By Ibert and Eleanor Mellan. 150 pages. Price, $4.75. New York: Philosophical Library, 1956.

Dictionary of Poisons is a fine lexicon for a forbidding night's entertainment. For those who are always eager to be there first with aid it should provide many potentialities for life-saving. For chair-bound connoisseurs of English detective fiction, it is well nigh a necessity. The incidence of poisoning in the England of country estates must be the highest of any country since the unification of Italy and also as alarming as that of brain tumors in daytime radio serials. Unhappily that England survives mainly in such fiction, done in, not by insidious potions and obscure toxins, but by the bane of every man: taxes. Still the English medical practitioner in that society must have been the most astute of diagnosticians, since the initial symptoms following many poisons are so similar.

The Mellans' list of poisons is current, but it serves mainly as a scaffolding for pleasant writing about unpleasant agents. Decorum and the heritage of English manor propriety surely must have prevented a verbal pass at cantharidies, but many moderns might have appreciated a note about the crossing of paths of cocaine and Sigmund Freud (surgeons may substitute W.S. Halstead.)

There is one unfortunate typographical error in the section on Mandragora (mandrake). Instead of being exorcised, pain is "exercised by ancient remedies administered in an atmosphere of incantations, charms, and mysticism." "Running fits, St. Vitus dance, and galloping consumption" come to mind, but no "exercised" pain. But for those puzzled since English Lit in college by line two of John Donne's Song—"Get with child a mandrake root"—this same section offers the answer. Mandrake was considered to ease the pain of parturition and as an amulet to protect against sterility.

A few paragraphs were unfortunately retained after proofs. Aconite and strychnine certainly have no place outside research in modern medicine. The inclusion of the dramatic story of Wenckebach's discovery of the effects of quinine and quinidine in cardiac arrhythmia would have been more appropriate. The Universal Antidote is also freely prescribed before victims are rushed to the hospitals, yet its composition is not revealed. The authors made amends in classifying their poisons: after some they suggest that one "Call A Physician!"; after others, "Call A Physician Immediately!"

Still these are petty complaints. The only real one is the absence of illustrations. At Christmas the macabre sense of humor of Charles Adams cartoons could make a Dictionary of Poisons a real experience.

Winthrop Offers Demerol With Scopolamine Ampuls

Demerol with scopolamine is now available from Winthrop Laboratories in two cc. ampuls, boxes of 25's, for the convenience of hospitals wishing more individualized doses of the drug.

Each cubic centimeter of Demerol with scopolamine contains 50 mg. Demerol hydrochloride and 0.2 mg. scopolamine hydrobromide. Previously, Winthrop had supplied Demerol with scopolamine in 30 cc. vials only, which will continue to be stocked. The combination is widely used in obstetrics and for preoperative preparation.

COLLEGE OF MEDICAL EVANGELISTS

The 1957 Alumni Postgraduate Convention of the College of Medical Evangelists School of Medicine will be held in Los Angeles, March 10-14, according to Convention Chairman William M. Nethery, M.D.

Prefaced by two days of refresher courses, March 10 and 11, at the White Memorial Hospital on the College of Medical Evangelists Los Angeles campus, the three - day Scientific Assembly schedules a full round of lectures, panels, and scientific exhibits for visiting physicians. Geared primarily for the general practitioner, the meeting is open to all physicians regardless of their specialty or their school affiliation.

The American Academy of General Practice grants Category I credit to physicians registered for the refresher courses and informal postgraduate credit to medical men registered for the Scientific Assembly at the Biltmore Hotel.

Requests for information about the 1957 convention should be addressed to the Managing Director, Alumni Postgraduate Convention, 316 North Bailey Street, Los Angeles 33, California.

NATIONAL MEDICAL FOUNDATION FOR EYE CARE

Announcement was made 11-15-56 of the establishment of the National Medical Foundation for Eye Care, a non-profit scientific and educational institution, incorporated in New Jersey. The Foundation has been organized by ophthalmologists of the country to provide American ophthalmology with an agency to present to the public generally and to fellow physicians pertinent information on the care and treatment of the eyes.

THE WORLD MEDICAL ASSOCIATION

Dr. Louis H. Bauer, Secretary General of The World Medical Association announced recently that he had wired the United Nations urging that body to insist on the administration of all needed aid to Hungary in its present tragic situation as a result of the ruthless butchery and strangling of the spirit of freedom.

The 53 national member associations, numbering more than 700,000 doctors were urged to send all possible medical and financial aid to the Hungarian people and doctors, through the International Red Cross Committee. The International Red Cross was notified that these steps had been taken.

PAN AMERICAN SANITARY BUREAU

Some 3,000,000 houses in the malarious areas of Mexico will be sprayed starting January 1, 1957, in the largest undertaking of its kind ever attempted in this hemisphere. This enormous enterprise is aimed at wiping out the mosquitoes which transmit malaria, thus effecting the eradication of this disease in Mexico.

DEPARTMENT OF THE ARMY

The Army's first formal residency training program in preventive medicine will begin July 1, 1957, according to an announcement by the Army Surgeon General's Office, Washington, D. C.

Regular Army Medical Corps Officers or qualified civilian physicians who accept commissions in the Regular Army are eligible to participate in this program. Interested civilian physicians may apply to The Surgeon General, Department of the Army, Washington 25, D. C., Attention: Chief, Personnel Division. Military personnel should apply through appropriate channels.

DEPARTMENT OF HEALTH, EDUCATION, AND WELFARE

The Public Health Service has announced today 44 five-year research fellowship awards to scientists in 29 universities and medical schools in 20 States, the District of Columbia, and Canada.

The awards are the first in a new Federal program designed to increase manpower for research in the basic medical sciences.

Recipients are scientists who have completed their doctor's degrees in biochemistry, pharmacology, physiology, microbiology, pathology, and the psychological sciences.

Those in North Carolina receiving awards are Drs. Sam Love, Department of Microbiology; and Harry M. Carpenter, Department of Pathology, Bowman Gray School of Medicine of Wake Forest College; Drs. Leo Pine, Department of Bacteriology, and William H. Knisely, Department of Anatomy, Duke University School of Medicine; and Drs. Robert D. Langdell, Department of Pathology; Billy Baggett, Department of Pharmacology; and Ira Fowler, Department of Anatomy, University of North Carolina School of Medicine.

Awards of more than $700,000 for a four-year investigation into the causes of cerebral palsy and mental retardation have been made to Yale University School of Medicine and to Brown University, Dr. Leroy E. Burney, Surgeon General of the Public Health Service, announced recently.

Dr. Burney said these awards mark the beginning of a large coordinated research program which, during the next 10 to 20 years, will attempt to identify factors responsible for such disorders as cerebral palsy, mental retardation, blindness, and deafness.

FOR POSITIVE DIURESIS

ROLICTON*

• oral b.i.d. dosage

• continuous control of edema

The new, highly effective oral diuretic, Rolicton, greatly simplifies the task of maintaining an edema-free state in the patient with congestive heart failure. Rolicton meets the criteria for a dependable diuretic: continuous effectiveness, oral administration and clinical safety.

In extensive clinical studies the diuretic response clearly indicates that a majority of patients can be kept edema-free with Rolicton. In these investigations it was noted that side reactions were uncommon. When they did occur they were usually mild.

In most edematous patients Rolicton may be employed as the sole diuretic agent. When used adjunctively in severe cases, Rolicton is also valuable in eliminating the "peaks and valleys" associated with the parenteral administration of mercurial diuretics.

One tablet of Rolicton b.i.d., after meals, is usually adequate for maintenance therapy after the first day's dosage of four tablets. Some patients respond well to one tablet daily. G. D. Searle & Co., Chicago 80, Illinois. Research in the Service of Medicine.

years ago they told me:

"YOU HAVE LESS THAN A YEAR TO LIVE!"

"MUST HAVE BEEN back in 1919 or '20. Hopeless case of diabetes. No known cure . . .

"BUT HERE I AM. They found a treatment—insulin—in time. Today, nobody has to die of diabetes.

"CANCER, I know, is a tougher problem. But the laboratories can lick that one, too—with our support. Already, they're curing people who would have been done for a few years ago. Last year—thanks to $5,000,000 allocated by the American Cancer Society from our contributions—they found out a lot more . . . though there's still a long way to go.

"THEY NEED MONEY, though. $5,000,000 is still less than 4 cents per American per year. Not enough. Not enough to find the answer fast enough—230,000 Americans are going to die of cancer this year, they say.

"I'M NOT RICH, but I gave 'em $50 last year—hope to do better this time. After all, where would I be if the laboratories working on diabetes, that time, hadn't been given enough support—?"

AN EXPERIMENT IN MEDICAL NOMENCLATURE INTRODUCING THE TERM:

"cell examination for uterine cancer"

The exfoliative cytological examination is called by some doctors the cytologic cervical test—by others the "Pap" smear test. In urging all women to have this test annually, we are calling it the cell examination for uterine cancer.

Here are our reasons:

Cytologic cervical test is a term which seems complicated to many women.

"Pap" smear test is simple, but women we have talked to find the word "smear" unpleasant and disturbing, and it may add to their anxieties about pelvic examinations.

Public relations advisors say that broadcasters and editors will dislike "smear"—and TV, radio and the press will be essential to the success of this educational project.

We have considered other terms but have at last agreed on cell examination for uterine cancer as the term which simply and accurately describes the keystone of this vitally important program.

This test can help save thousands of women each year. In many parts of the country it is becoming widely accepted as a part of a routine checkup. As fast as county medical societies approve, our local Units will urge women to go to their physicians annually for a cell examination for uterine cancer.

Chloromycetin®

for today's problem pathogens

Because of the increasing emergence of pathogenic strains resistant to commonly used antibiotics, judicious selection of the most effective agent is essential to successful therapy. In vitro sensitivity studies serve as a valuable guide to the antibiotic most likely to be most effective. Both clinical experience and sensitivity studies indicate the greater antibacterial efficacy of CHLOROMYCETIN (chloramphenicol, Parke-Davis) treatment for many resistant infections.[1-7]

CHLOROMYCETIN is a potent therapeutic agent and, because certain blood dyscrasias have been associated with its administration, it should not be used indiscriminately or for minor infections. Furthermore, as with certain other drugs, adequate blood studies should be made when the patient requires prolonged or intermittent therapy.

THE EMBLEM OF ARTIFICIAL LIMB SUPERIORITY

For Over 90 Years

Since the first Hanger Prosthesis was manufactured in 1861, Hanger Artificial Legs and Arms have given satisfaction to thousands of wearers. These people, once partially or completely incapacitated, have been able to return to work and play and to take part in the everyday activities of life. To many thousands, the Hanger seal is a symbol of help and hope. To them, and to all, the Hanger name is a guarantee of Comfort, Correct Fit, and Fine Performance.

COUNCILOR DISTRICTS

Constitution and By-Laws of the Medical Society of the State of North Carolina
Article VI.—Section and District Societies

The House of Delegates may provide for a division on the scientific work of the Society into appropriate sections, and for the organization of such councilor district societies as will promote the best interests of the profession, such societies to be composed exclusively of members of component county societies.

Chapter VII.—Councilor Districts

Section 1. To facilitate the more perfect organization of the medical profession, the state of North Carolina is hereby divided by counties into ten councilor districts as follows:

First District — Bertie, Chowan-Perquimans, Gates, Hertford, and Pasquotank-Camden-Currituck-Dare.

Second District — Beaufort, Carteret, Craven, Hyde, Jones, Lenoir, Martin-Washington-Tyrrell, Pamlico, and Pitt.

Third District — Bladen, Brunswick, Columbus, Duplin, New Hanover, Onslow, Pender and Sampson.

Fourth District—Edgecombe-Nash, Greene, Halifax, Johnson, Northampton, Warren, Wayne, and Wilson.

Fifth District—Chatham, Cumberland, Harnett, Hoke, Lee, Moore, Richmond, Robeson, and Scotland.

Sixth District—Alamance-Caswell, Durham-Orange, Franklin, Granville, Person, Vance, and Wake.

Seventh District — Anson, Cabarrus, Cleveland, Gaston, Lincoln, Mecklenburg, Montgomery, Rutherford, Stanly, and Union.

Eighth District—Ashe, Forsyth-Stokes, Guilford, Randolph, Rockingham, Surry-Yadkin, Watauga, and Wilkes-Alleghany.

Ninth District—Avery, Burke, Caldwell, Catawba. Davidson, Iredell-Alexander, and Rowan-Davie.

Tenth District—Buncombe, Cherokee, Graham, Haywood, Henderson, Jackson-Swain, McDowell, Macon-Clay, Madison, Mitchell-Yancey, Polk, and Transylvania.

SPECIAL INTERN-RESIDENT MEMBERSHIP

By authority of the House of Delegates this special class of membership is established with no requirement of county society membership, although county society membership will be permissive.

This membership is limited in tenure to the period of official intern or residency training in a hospital located in North Carolina which has been approved by the American Medical Association for intern-residency training. This class of membership will expire immediately upon completion of internship or residency training in a North Carolina hospital.

Fisher, George Walton, Jr., Hos. Res.[7] ..... McPherson Hospital ..... Durham
MacDonald, Donald Ewan, Hos Res[30] ..... N. C. Memorial Hosp. ..... Chapel Hill

SPECIAL STUDENT MEMBERSHIP

By authority of the Executive Council as provided under Article IV, Section 3 and Chapter XV, Section 5 of the Constitution and By-Laws of the Medical Society of the State of North Carolina, a student membership of prelicensed student physicians is provided. This class of membership will expire immediately upon completion of training in a recognized School of Medicine located in North Carolina or by a native resident student enrolled in a recognized School of Medicine of another state upon graduation therefrom.

Hassell, Charles Matthews, Jr., Med. Student ..... 1553 Stanford Rd. ..... Charlotte

FIFTY YEAR CLUB

The House of Delegates of the Medical Society of the State of North Carolina in May of 1953 authorized the Executive Council of the Society to establish a special recognition for those physicians residing in the State of North Carolina who were members currently of the State Medical Society, who had established legal practices of medicine and who had actively practiced medicine during their life time for a period of fifty years.

Listed below in alphabetical order are the names and address of those physicians residing in North Carolina, whom the Medical Society of the State of North Carolina has recognized as members of the FIFTY YEAR CLUB of the State Medical Society. This list will be added to from year to year and likewise substracted from as losses to this club group are sustained and reckoned.

This listing for 1956 may include Fifty Year Club members, who have passed away since their recognition. The list will include only those members surviving during the year of the list and those added for that year.

RIGHT OR WRONG WAY

In collecting money, just as in most activities, there is a right and a wrong way to approach a patient, in order to collect a past-due obligation.

Over the years, and as a result of a multitude of experiences, we have developed the most efficient and psychologically effective collection methods possible for getting the money, while retaining good will.

We do it all, not only local accounts, but anywhere in the U. S. or Canada can be handled through our office. All the forwarding to various towns and cities is done for you, by us.

We leave you the time to practice your profession, while we collect the money, and maintain good relations between you and your patients.

Proven results over the past 30 years show that we can help you, just as we have helped hundreds of physicians with their ever present credit and collection problems.

CHOLESTEROL

and animal food products

FOODS of animal origin (milk, cheese, meat, eggs, etc.) combined with plant foods are needed for optimum nutrition.

About two-thirds of our protein comes from animal foods.[1] Most animal protein has a high biological value, by virtue of its content of essential amino acids. Animal foods are also a source of vitamin B_{12}, a factor necessary for red blood cell regeneration. There is evidence that the presence of animal protein foods in the diet favors normal lipid metabolism.[2]

Four-fifths of our calcium comes from animal foods, chiefly from dairy products. Without dairy foods it is exceedingly difficult to meet the requirements for calcium. Animal foods also supply three-fourths of our available riboflavin, one-half our niacin, and one-third of our thiamine.[1] These and other vitamins are necessary for normal cellular metabolism.

Animal foods contain cholesterol, a lipid which is a normal constituent of all body cells, and which is synthesized by the body from substances derived from protein, fats, and carbohydrates. Disturbed lipid metabolism may result in deposition of cholesterol with fatty acids and protein in the inner walls of the blood vessels. This condition, atherosclerosis, is a forerunner of a number of cardiovascular diseases.[3]

Atherosclerosis is frequently associated with obesity, diabetes, and other metabolic disorders.[3-4] The cause of atherosclerosis has not been determined. Restriction of dietary cholesterol by elimination of animal foods has not been shown to be beneficial in its prevention or cure.[4]

The omission of the valuable nutrients found in these foods constitutes a nutritional risk not justified on the basis of currently available evidence.[5]
